

Chapter 309 Conducted By Galilea Herself

Larry's words had been nothing more than a mocking challenge, or so he thought. He never expected Galilea to take them seriously, let alone succeed.

Galilea surprised him with her persistence. Little did Larry know that this was only the beginning of a chain of events that would change their lives forever.

After posing that challenge to Galilea, Larry didn't see or hear from her for the next six months. He assumed she had given up. It was no easy feat to win Tyrone's heart.

Larry had never seen a woman around Tyrone. Tyrone was always preoccupied with other matters.

But to Larry's surprise, Galilea succeeded.

When Tyrone began his internship at the company, one day after work, Larry invited Tyrone to join him for lunch. Much to Larry's astonishment, Tyrone was engrossed in responding to a message.

As they left the restaurant after their meal, a young woman was waiting at the door. As soon as she saw them, she made her way over.

Tyrone made the introduction, presenting Galilea as his girlfriend.

Galilea greeted Larry with a friendly smile, feigning unfamiliarity.

Larry observed her facade, then shifted his gaze to Tyrone,

Later that night, after returning home, Galilea contacted Larry.

Larry didn't pay much heed initially, but Galilea frequently updated him about Tyrone's activities.

One of these updates left a lasting impression on Larry. Galilea disclosed that Tyrone had confided in her about his educational pursuits. His motivation to opt for financial sciences and diligently study mathematical sciences stemmed from his ambition to vie for heirship at the Blakely Group.

Hearing this, Tyrone furrowed his brows and swiftly retorted with a sneer, "I had never uttered such words!"

Neither of them had expected that Galilea would fuel discord between them.

In retrospect, perhaps they shouldn't have been surprised.

Galilea's objective was to wed Larry. She needed to be "useful" to capture his attention.

As the eldest grandson of the Blakely family, Larry wielded substantial influence and could obtain almost anything he desired. Galilea found it challenging to have any sway over Larry. Fabricating that Tyrone aspired to be the heir and helping Larry navigate this falsified conflict was the only way for her to earn Larry's trust.

Larry glanced at Tyrone and didn't ask whether his words were truthful. "At first, I was dubious."

When Tyrone began excelling in his internship, and Cesar commended him repeatedly, Larry wondered about Galilea's words.

Some individuals whispered in Larry's ear, who claimed that his grandfather didn't discriminate based on Tyrone's background. They argued that his grandfather treated all potential heirs equally and that Larry should not assume that he would automatically become the successor of the Blakely Group.

The disposition of their relatives and senior figures within the Blakely Group toward Larry subtly shifted.

Galilea maintained contact with Larry, subtly hinting at Tyrone's "careful plan" and "ambition." She implied her ability to procure Tyrone's project data if Larry needed it.

Larry was compassionate and gentle but indecisive.

Over the past decade, including when Larry discovered Sabrina's investigation into the kidnapping case, numerous opportunities arose for him to resolve the problems, but he failed to seize them.

One reason Cesar favored Tyrone over Larry was Larry's gentle nature, rendering him incapable of quelling dissent within the senior leadership and struggling to navigate the cutthroat world of commercial competition.

Galilea's words, coupled with the influence of others, began to weigh heavily on Larry's judgment. His hatred for Tyrone intensified each day, yet he grappled with indecision.

Then, positive news came again from the research and development project Tyrone participated in. The project director repeatedly expressed his appreciation for Tyrone in front of Cesar.

Cesar had allotted Tyrone five percent of Elijah's shares.

Feeling the pressure of the situation, Larry reluctantly agreed to Galilea's scheme.

Being Tyrone's girlfriend, Galilea was constantly by his side. Exploiting her proximity, she leaked his project data, causing a substantial loss to his project.

Following an investigation, Tyrone emerged as the prime suspect in the data leak.

However, since there was no concrete evidence, the investigation into the leak hit a dead end, even though Tyrone was the suspect due to his involvement with the project.

Tyrone nodded thoughtfully. "I did have my suspicions of her at that time."

True to his nature, Tyrone pursued the investigation relentlessly, despite the dead end of the previous investigation. If it were his fault that caused the data to be leaked, he would take the responsibility.

However, in the end, he found out that he himself was the one who was most likely to leak the data.

Tyrone knew he wasn't responsible for the leak. The only other person who had access to his computer was Galilea.

Tyrone had been in a relationship with Galilea for a while. However, after that incident, he contemplated breaking up with her. He felt it wasn't working out for them anymore.

After a tense confrontation, Galilea unexpectedly fled away in deep distress. Tyrone soon learned she had been abducted and subjected to brutal torture.

Amidst the chaos involving the kidnapping of Galilea, the data leakage and impending break-up were momentarily set aside.

Larry added, "I regret agreeing to Galilea's tactic to leak the data. It's difficult to avoid detection when using such a way."

However, events had already unfolded, leaving Larry grappling with what would transpire next.

Tyrone speculated. "So Galilea's being kidnapped is related to herself? Did she orchestrate the kidnapping to get off suspension?"

Larry replied, "Yes, Galilea planned and executed the kidnapping herself. The so-called unbearable experience was also a fabrication."

News of Galilea's scheme of kidnapping herself to clear her reputation reached Larry only after she had set her plan in motion.

For Galilea, there was no way out.

She wouldn't allow herself to give up halfway.

Once the fact that she leaked the data was exposed, Tyrone would end the relationship, rendering her useless to Larry.

Given that what she had done was unforgivable, and on top of that, with her modest background, Cesar would never accept her to be Larry's wife.

What she had done would be meaningless. Worse still, the consequences of her deceitful behavior could be severe. She could face significant penalties, including having to pay compensation and even being incarcerated.

Even though Tyrone had a similar guess before, he involuntarily clenched his hands into tight fists when he heard Larry's confession. Veins bulged on the back of his Chapter 309 Conducted By Galilea H 🎁 +120 Points at most hands, and a pulsating ache throbbled in his temples.

Galilea's so-called being kidnapped had been a charade to draw sympathy and make her look like the victim, distracting the attention. Her supposed horrific ordeal was just a lie, an illusion of suffering. Even her trauma, as it turned out, was a pretense.

Tyrone's eyes blazed with intense fury. He gritted his teeth and tightened his fists with increasing force, causing his knuckles to creak. The physical manifestation of his anger was frighteningly clear as he struggled to contain his emotions. It was an involuntary action that he wasn't aware of.

For a long time, Tyrone had carried the weight of guilt on his shoulders, blaming himself for not being able to protect Galilea from a terrible situation. He had made countless sacrifices to comfort her after the traumatic experience, hurting the people he loved most. He had given her every benefit of the doubt and indulged her every need, only to find out it was all for nothing.

Tyrone was struck with a profound realization of how his actions toward Galilea had deeply hurt Sabrina. At the time, he had convinced himself that his actions were justified, believing that Galilea had gone through a traumatic ordeal that warranted his support and defense. However, now that he knew the truth, he was filled with complex emotions.

As these thoughts tormented him, Tyrone's self-hatred swelled. Why hadn't he uncovered the truth sooner?

Had he known it earlier, he could have spared himself and Sabrina from the painful divorce, and their child wouldn't have...

Tyrone's chest convulsed with a mix of rage and grief.

Taking a deep breath, he spoke in a low, seething voice. "So what happened to Sabrina's father? Did he die just because he captured some photos of those kidnapers?"

It was no big deal if Conner had taken photos of them. The kidnapers were going to be sent overseas anyway. So why did they have to kill him?

"No, there's more to it than that," Larry declared with a deep sigh as he glanced down for a moment, then continued. "Galilea had meticulously orchestrated a plan to send those men overseas, urging them to lie low until the storm passed. Everything was going according to plan. However, there was an unexpected turn of events. Conner, against the odds, had found them."

Connor was an unexpected part of the plan.

"So... He overheard the conversation between Galilea and the kidnapers."

Tyrone understood everything in an instant.

Connor had captured incriminating photos of the kidnapers. He also unveiled the truth behind this seemingly grave abduction, a conspiracy involving the hostage and the captors. The mastermind behind it all was none other than Galilea herself.

Tyrone seethed with anger at the extent of the deception and betrayal.

The supposed kidnapping was just a game played by Galilea, displaying no regard for the significant waste of police resources. Worse still, no suspects have been apprehended.

It all made sense.

Galilea and her cohorts found Connor.

Galilea's fear mounted after discovering Connor was a journalist. She shuddered at the possibility of Connor exposing her deceitful game.

The fallout from such news would shatter Galilea's reputation and lead to legal repercussions.

That being the case, she couldn't deny the fact that she had leaked the data. Consequently, she stood to lose everything.

Larry wouldn't protect her, and the Blakely family wouldn't accept a granddaughter-in-law associated with negative news.

After all she had done, failing was not an option!

To conceal one falsehood, Galilea needed a cascade of further deceit.

Terrified that Connor might involve the police, Galilea rushed to negotiate with him privately.

Connor, an honest and righteous man, firmly declined her offer.

Less than forty-eight hours after their negotiation, Connor met a tragic end in a car accident, succumbing to his injuries in the hospital.
