

Arabella 1564

Chapter 1564

"No worries, what are friends for!" chirped the girl with the pixie cut. Her long-haired bestie had just handed Arabella a pair of glowing bunny ear headbands before taking off. She glanced back at Arabella with a mix of shyness and admiration, not holding back her praise. "You look absolutely stunning, this is for you."

Arabella watched the two girls dash away, slightly bemused as she held the glowing headgear in her hands.

"My fiancée is not only a magnet for the guys but the gals can't get enough of her either." Romeo said with a chuckle, helping her put on the headband.

She was naturally cool and ethereal, but with the bunny ears, she suddenly embodied a playful charm.

"Gorgeous," Romeo said, pulling out his phone and opening up the camera app. "Take a look."

With a serene smile, the woman in the white coat replied, "Yes, that's me."

"What's the story here? David actually sent you concert tickets?" a few fans asked, their curiosity piqued.

Still smiling, the woman in the white coat shared her tale, "I had a serious illness not too long ago, ended up in the ICU. The doctors weren't sure I'd make it. My biggest regret at that time was never having seen David live in concert. My mom, without telling me, got in touch with David's management team. As many of you know, David visited me in the hospital, lifted my spirits, and he even left my home address, promising to send me two tickets for the opening night of his world tour – one for me and one for my mom."

"And this lovely lady is your mom? She looks so young." Many fans greeted the woman's mother, marveling at her youthful appearance, and added, "David's such a sweetheart. Not only did he visit you privately, but he also sent tickets, and such amazing seats too."

"Yes, when he visited, he autographed a bunch of stuff for me, took photos, and wrote me a lengthy message of encouragement. I've had that message as my phone wallpaper for a year now." The woman in the white coat pulled out her phone, showing off the handwritten note from David.
