

Arabella 1565

Chapter 1565

"It was his encouragement that saw me through the darkest days of my life." The girl in the white coat spoke with a lingering sense of gratitude.

"He's a good soul, you know," her mother chimed in, her eyes glistening with tears. "We were having a rough time financially, and he went ahead and covered the surgery costs, easing our burdens. I never used to be into celebs, but now I'm all for my daughter fangirling over him. Heck, I'm on board too."

"Hey, we sure picked the right guy! Things are looking up now, no need for tears, you should be happy!"

"His handwriting is so neat! Can you send me that quote? I wanna make it my screensaver."

"Me too, me too!"

our hometown and there was this massive flood? Water filled up the first three floors of our building, and we were stranded on the rooftop, waiting for help. It was terrifying, and out of nowhere, we saw these volunteers in a lifeboat paddling towards us. My relief work, some people accused him of just showing off. Please, who would wear a supplies, wading through the water with us, pulling boats, water up to his knees and he didn't care. I thought, 'This guy's got focus and looks to boot.' Never would have guessed ponytailed girl seemed lost in the memory, top-tier celeb, juggling a packed schedule—acting, variety shows, music, dance rehearsals, events. And still, he finds time for charity. Such a good person, and pose for the camera. Not David. He genuinely his actions,

parents died in a car crash, I was ready to leave this world. The night I made up my mind, I sent David a private message, telling him I was going and wishing him the best. I remember clearly, it was 4,14 AM, and David instantly

up at

"He must have checked my Twitter, commented on how nice my clothes designs were, and asked why I'd stopped designing. He said he was looking forward to wearing something I created one day. He asked if I wasn't planning to stick with him through his career, that he'd be around for many more years, and he wanted me around too."

Tears welled up in the eyes of many fans.

"He said so much to lift my spirits, insisting I had to keep living. He even sang to me, sent voice messages, singing this unreleased song called 'Courage', written for his fans. It's his words that night, his song, that pulled me through."

Arabella, sitting in the front, hadn't realized David was so kind and caring behind the scenes to do so much without ever boasting.

Listening to all this, Arabella felt it incredibly heartwarming.