

Arabella 1625

Chapter 1625

[Arabella bought him a new massage chair?] Serena asked in disbelief.

[Yeah, Ms. Arabella got some brand I've never heard of before. Mr. and Mrs. Collins said it felt like heaven and wouldn't stop praising it all night.]

Turned out her parents really that fickle, which Serena found unexpected. Was it just because the chair she had bought them before was too cheap, not high-end enough? But that was the prize money from her piano competition.

[And that painting you did for them, the one that used to hang in their bedroom, got taken down last night, too and was replaced with one by Ms. Arabella.]

She couldn't believe her ears. Her parents were erasing her presence, stripping away years of her affection with the removal of that painting!

[So, practically nothing you ever gave them is left in their room. That blanket you bought them has been packed away. And the clothes you gifted them, they're not wearing those anymore either, all packed up.]

just how much

with all your prize money, the one she used wondered, why this sudden change of heart from a falling

Myrna? Chasel's girlfriend?

do you ask?]

came by yesterday, and after that, Mrs. Collins was furious. She took off the bracelet and ordered

Could Myrna have blabbed everything to her mother? With that thought, her resentment towards Myrna grew that before even officially joining the family, that bitch was already causing through their door -

Serena stood there, dumbstruck.

Move out? Were her parents kicking her out of the Collins family? Not even the house next door was good enough for her now; they wanted her gone. Weren't they the ones who always said they treated her as their own daughter? Weren't they supposed to be fair and loving? Why were they driving her away?

[Erik, did you really hear that?] Serena's fingers trembled as she typed the message.

[I did hear it, but they were just discussing. I don't know what they've decided in the end.]

Tears streamed down Serena's face; eighteen years of being raised by them, and they could still be this heartless.

Even a pet would garner more affection.