"Lucas." Nana could not hold herself back and called out to him.

Lucas turned around and said, "Let's go back to the ward."

"Do you blame me?" Nana asked.

"I don't," Lucas said.

"But you're not happy," Nana looked at him, "Lucas, I love you too much. Just a twitch of your face and I know what you're feeling. Are you upset that I asked you to keep your distance from Cordy?"

"No, I'm not." Lucas denied.

"Are the three years we spent together no match for Cordy, whom you just got to know?" Nana became increasingly agitated as tears tumbled down her cheeks.

Lucas looked at Nana and said, "I just don't want you to go against your conscience because of me."

Because of that... the entire Lynd family turned up at the hospital.

They were anxious about Nana's sudden attack.

Because of Nana's condition, she has always been heavily doted upon in the Lynd family. Everyone indulged her every whim and fancy.

"What happened, Nana? You've only returned to the capital for a few months, yet you've been sent to the emergency room twice!" Jean said reprovngly, but her eyes were filled with genuine concern.

"I have no idea, either." Nana shook her head, putting on her image of the obedient girl she had always been.

"Perhaps you really aren't suited for the capital after all. I was just thinking that you should settle down in the capital instead of migrating overseas after getting married to Lucas, since I might miss you too much," Jean said helplessly. "But now, it seems like sending you overseas might be a better idea?"

Nana looked silently at Lucas, as if seeking his opinion.

After Jean left, Lucas returned to the ward, where Nana was alone inside.

She had chased away her entire dedicated medical team.

A bright smile broke across her face the moment she saw Lucas return.

She looked worlds apart from the woman who was wild with emotions earlier in the day.

“Lucas, you’re back,” she enthused.

Her voice sounded high-pitched, as if she was trying to be coquettish to him.

She seemed as though she had completely forgotten about their fight.

“Are you upset?” Nana asked cautiously upon seeing the cold, hard look on his face.

“Will you... break up with me, then?” Nana looked wistfully at Lucas.

Lucas swallowed past his constricted throat.

He suddenly realized that he was unable to give an immediate reply.

“I promise I’ll never behave like that from now on.” Nana admitted to her mistake again. “Lucas, don’t abandon me, please?”

"I won't," Lucas said.

He had promised her that he would take care of her for her entire life.

He had never considered breaking his word.

"But I think that Lucas has feelings for you," Richard said firmly. "He likes you."

"Then all the more we should keep our distance," Cordy said with determination in her voice. "The worst thing we can do is to break a couple apart. Dicky, you must always remember, never be a third party in someone else's relationship!"

"We aren't the third party, Nana is the third party!" Richard said adamantly.

Richard typically would not use that tone on her.

He had always been obedient to her, but he was unusually stubborn and strong-headed today.

Did Richard think that Cordy felt wronged by Nana today?

She did not feel wronged.

Firstly, although Nana did malign her, she did not feel like she was disadvantaged at all during the incident today. Conversely, Nana's malicious actions created a rift between her and Lucas.

Secondly, Nana was not an important figure at all to Cordy, and Cordy did not take Nana and what she did to heart.

Aside from John, could she find it in herself to accept another man?

Cordy found it difficult to imagine living with another person.

In the afternoon, Sean came to the hotel and had a meal with Cordy and Richard.

Richard was sluggish throughout the entire meal, and he looked listless and lethargic even as he walked to the buffet line for some desserts.

Cordy looked straight into Sean’s eyes.

Sean smiled helplessly. “What, are you suspecting me?”

“How can I not?” Cordy said solemnly.

Cordy went through all the possibilities in her head and found Sean to be the prime suspect.

He was currently staying with the Cranstons in the room that was closest to Jesse’s room. His word held power in the Cranston family and the servants in the family heeded his command. It was easy for him to bribe a couple of them.

“Of course you can/ Sean said nonchalantly.

But on second thought, Cordy did not think that it was Sean.

It was not that she was afraid that he was a thief posing as a judge, but rather, she realized he did not have a motive to harm Jesse.

From what she heard, Jesse wrote his will long ago. It would not be a surprise for him to suddenly pass away given his power and status and that he was advanced in years. So he made preparations early such that everything was set in stone when he died.

That left her with only one other possibility.

Many people in the audience were moved to tears.

The judges gave their comments after their performance ended.

As usual, Hailey Zimmerman was the first one to speak, and she did so in her typical solemn manner.

“Under Director Parker’s guidance, I see a marked improvement in everyone’s performance. Your team was in a mess previously, but your teamwork shone through this performance and it moved me.”

All the actors were so elated hearing Hailey’s comments that they bowed profusely in gratitude.

Hailey went on, ‘Amid the excellent condition that everyone was in, some of you really surprised me. Of course, it’s not to say that the rest were not good, but it’s just that these few stood out, such as Candice and Shanice who have improved by leaps and bounds. Continue to work hard.”

“Thank you, Ms. Zimmerman,” Candice and Shanice expressed their gratitude for having their hard work recognized.

“Everyone else did great, too. Keep up the good work.” Hailey rounded off with some pleasantries.

Zoe heaved a sigh of relief.

Finally, she was not on the receiving end of Hailey’s scolding, although Hailey did not commend her.

After she was done with work, Zoe swiftly removed her makeup.

Today was Yelena's third birthday, and she had promised to celebrate it with Yelena.

Thankfully, filming began in the afternoon and it ended at night.

Although it was slightly late, she would not miss the appointment.

"Congratulations, Zoe!" Candice said, "I didn't think that you'd rank third in this round. I was still worried that the role was so minor that you might be forgotten. Indeed, there are no lousy roles, only lousy actors."

"Congratulations to you too for coming out second. You really deserve it." Zoe congratulated Candice perfunctorily.

"Are you in a rush?" Candice saw Zoe hurriedly packing her things and asked. "I was talking about celebrating our win last night with Director Parker and thanking him with a meal."

"Tonight? I can't make it tonight, I already have an appointment." Zoe rejected Candice without a second thought.

"You really can't go?"

"Who are you meeting that's so important?" Candice could not understand.

Why would Zoe give up on such a golden opportunity to get close to the judge?

Yelena sported a bob and baby fat remained on her adorable face. Her eyes were large and round and her skin was fair. She was bound to grow up as a beauty.

She slumped over the table listlessly, her face splat on the tablecloth.

Of course, Zoe knew that Yelena was like that because she was late. Yelena was angry and disappointed.

She hastened her footsteps and walked toward Yelena.

“Mommy!” The moment Yelena saw Zoe, her posture transformed completely.

Her entire demeanor brightened up, and even her eyes shone in the night.

She reached out her stumpy little arms and hugged Zoe as best as she could. “Mommy, you’re finally here.”

“I’m sorry for being late.”

“It’s all right,” Yelena said forgivingly in her sweet voice. “Granny said that although it is my birthday today, it was also a very difficult day for Mommy. Mommy gave birth to me on that day and suffered much pain. So we’ll celebrate my birthday today, as well as what Mommy did.”

Zoe felt warmth creep up her heart at Yelena’s words.
