

Chapter 1407 A Perfect Masterpiece

After receiving praises and affirmation from Draco for the first time, Mandy's eyes were gleaming with joy as she gazed at the handsome man before her. She hoped for him to say a few more complimentary words as it would make her happier than winning against Janet.

However, Draco, who never cared for romantic relationships, naturally did not understand Mandy's feelings and expectations. "You have great talent. Long as you can focus on improving yourself and give it time, you will achieve great things in the fashion industry."

Draco's calm and polite attitude dimmed the light in Mandy's eyes once again.

What an insensitive man! He had no clue of what went on in a woman's mind!

Mandy was expecting him to play along and say that she was excellent and that soon she might be able to match him. However, he only gave her uninteresting words of encouragement.

While silently complaining in her heart, Mandy lowered her head to hide her disappointment and nodded. "Thank you, Mr. Wesley. I will continue to work hard."

Draco nodded in reply. He was always reticent and indifferent, and now that the misunderstanding was cleared up, he wouldn't speak more than he needed to.

His silence only disheartened Mandy even more.

She realized that her expectations were merely her wishful thinking and nothing more. Draco was only interested in her work. 1

At that moment, someone came out of the fitting room.

Draco and Mandy turned towards the fitting room, and when they saw Brandon come out, their eyes lit up with wonder.

The tall and handsome Brandon wore a fantastically unique black suit, accentuating his lean yet muscular figure.

The pitch-black color brought out his cold and stern eyes. His chiseled features complemented the suit's design perfectly so that it did not overshadow him and maintained its own aesthetics.

Brandon just stood there, glancing at the somewhat stunned pair; his noble and cold demeanor was innate, commanding attention with a natural sense of elegance and poise.

Although Draco's designs were known to be superior and Mandy had high opinions of her designs, they had to admit that the suit Janet designed for Brandon was perfect for him. Everything about it was exceptional, enhancing his features while showcasing Janet's unique design style.

They marveled in their hearts, not only at the suit but also at Brandon's model-like features. In their eyes, they jointly constituted Janet's perfect masterpiece.

"Janet, you've made great progress," Draco expressed his admiration. "The fashion industry is truly full of talented people. With an outstanding designer like you, I'm afraid I'll be left behind soon."

Shockingly, Mandy did not feel upset to hear that praise. Instead, she silently gazed at Brandon's suit while thinking of the gap between her and Janet's design skills.

Janet smiled and said, "Mr. Wesley, I'm flattered."

Draco smiled back and replied, "Alright, since everything is ready, you can take your..."

Glancing at Brandon, his smile deepened. "Take your model and get ready backstage two minutes earlier to avoid any mishaps."

Janet nodded. "Thank you for your reminder, Mr. Wesley. But don't worry. I am fully aware of the fashion show process."

When Janet worked at W Marks Studio, she participated in the Iridescent Show. At that time, Draco did not attend the show, and she had arranged everything single-handedly, so she was already familiar with the process of fashion show.

Janet tilted her head, looking at Brandon, and smiled, reaching out her hand. "Let's go, handsome."

Brandon took Janet's hand but stared deep into her eyes without moving an inch.

Puzzled by his reaction, she asked, "What's the matter?"

Brandon's lips curved slightly as he whispered in Janet's ear, "Do you still remember what you promised?"
