

Chapter 665 Human Experiment

The news from the delta region reached Kuba, creating a stir.

In the Hecke Military Region, when Rohan learned of this development, his anger knew no bounds. He berated Rennes and Cannon, "You two failures! You were defeated by a small group and retreated. You even forfeited control over the delta region!

Do you realize the extensive resources I invested in training those soldiers, even providing them with weapons and technology? Now, those resources are in the hands of others. You two disappointments need to come up with a solution!"

Rennes hung his head, unable to utter a word.

He hadn't anticipated that the Dark Night Organization would act so decisively this time, disregarding the usual caution.

Even more disheartening was the fact that, following the events on the gambling ship, he could only stand by and watch the unfolding situation, devoid of the means to assist the forces in the delta region.

Looking at the injured Cannon, Rohan snorted, "I've always taught you both to take responsibility for your actions. You must find a way to regain control of the delta region on your own."

With that, Rohan turned around, waved his hand, and issued a stern warning. "Take Cannon to the doctor. Don't forget that this is your final chance."

Rennes nodded in fear and hurried out carrying Cannon.

When he got to the laboratory, he saw the doctor Rohan mentioned. He was engrossed in a horrifying experiment.

Rennes' heart sank. He had knowledge about the doctor's gruesome experiments.

The doctor was researching a potent catalyst to enhance human physical abilities. Shockingly, he used living people as subjects. He would toss them into a pool of the experimental substance, and when their bodies couldn't withstand the strain, they would meet a horrific end, exploding on the spot.

As Rennes and Cannon appeared, the doctor looked at them condescendingly. He then said casually, "Nice to meet you. Boss has already briefed me. You can just leave him with me."

Rennes carefully placed the dying Cannon onto the test bed and then stepped back. His anxiety was evident.

The doctor before them was Cannon's last hope. If the doctor couldn't save him, his fate would be sealed.

After the doctor conducted his examination, his expression turned slightly solemn. However, beneath the seriousness, a hint of excitement gleamed.

After a moment of contemplation, the doctor awakened the frail Cannon and said in a deep tone, "Your injuries are severe. Conventional medical methods won't suffice, but I can offer you a choice to participate in my experimental procedure.

If you fail, you will die, and it won't be pleasant. However, if you succeed, you'll not only survive but also become significantly stronger."

Cannon had heard about the doctor's experiment before. He didn't know much about it but its success rate was less than 1 in 1000.

But when he considered his burning resentment for Liam, his eyes reflected unwavering determination.

As a man on the brink of death, he resolved himself and nodded.

When Cannon consented, the doctor's excitement surged, and he initiated his transformation plan.

Cannon's broken nerves were meticulously replaced with machinery. His original body was dissected and substituted with mechanical parts, including many of his bones.

This process demanded absolute precision. Cannon's willpower also had to be unyielding.

Any mistake would mean his immediate demise on the operating table.

The doctor's brow was drenched in sweat. The transformation was quite intricate and couldn't be completed overnight.

Even if he succeeded, it would take some time for Cannon to acclimate to his new body. Apart from his brain and heart, everything else promised a fresh start, bestowing upon him newfound strength.

At this moment, Rennes got a call from Rohan, who told him to come immediately.

Immediately he got to him, Rohan issued a stern command. "You must reclaim control over the delta region for me. Cannon is undergoing transformation. You can stay here until his transformation is complete."

"Yes, brother. Be rest assured that I'll recover it," Rennes replied nervously.

Rohan's tone remained cold as he warned, "This mess is your responsibility and his. It was all your fault. I've made it clear that this is your final chance. If you fail, there's no need to return to me."

Rohan's words appeared to incense Rennes as a glimmer of anger flickered in his eyes.

In the lab, the anguish from the experiment fueled Cannon's growing agitation.

His hatred for Liam became so intense that it left room for only a singular thought in his heart, which was the relentless pursuit to kill Liam.

Chapter 665 Human Experi

 +90 Points at most

His hatred for Liam became so intense that it left room for only a singular thought in his heart, which was the relentless pursuit to kill Liam.

 I want no ads >