

Chapter 749 Senator

A week had passed, and there was still no word from the Duncan family. The powerful families in Invone were left to deal with Liam's relentless vengeance.

The Duncan family had previously eradicated all opposition in Invone. Currently, none of the families, not even the Sandoval family or the Padilla family, could hold a candle to the Hoffman family. Economically and militarily, they were simply outclassed!

In desperation, they sought help from the Duncan family, only to discover that the members of the Duncan family had already left Invone.

Hope seemed to evaporate for them all.

Liam, no longer wanting to waste any moment with them, gathered his elite forces and confidently headed toward the Sandoval family's base.

That day, his intent was clear. It was to expel the Sandoval family from Invone.

In no time, his hundreds of armed elites neutralized the guards outside the Sandoval family's residence.

Walking confidently into the main hall, Liam locked eyes with a visibly shaken Abbott.

Realizing the bleakness of their situation, Abbott pleaded, "Mr. Hoffman, with the Hoffman family reigning supreme in Invone, please spare our family. From now on, the Sandoval family will heed every command from the Hoffman family!"

In an attempt to appease Liam, Abbott ushered the trembling Adelina forward, adding flatteringly, "To demonstrate our commitment, I offer my daughter to your cousin, Leandro, as his woman!"

Adelina, paralyzed by fear, bore little resemblance to the assertive, dominant woman from before. She had been reduced to a mere bargaining chip!

Liam responded indifferently, "Perhaps you should offer your defiant daughter to someone more appreciative. The Hoffman family certainly isn't fond of her."

With a simple gesture from Liam, the Hoffman family's elite troops menacingly encircled the hall.

Seeing Liam's unyielding stance, a furious Abbott countered, "Liam, your audacity knows no bounds. As one of the four great families, if it comes to it, we'll fight to our last breath!"

With that, Abbott rallied the remnants of the Sandoval family's armed forces, readying them for a desperate last stand against Liam.

Liam stood fearless. The spear's chill touch hinted at his readiness to end both Abbott and his daughter.

As the anticipation of an impending battle mounted, a sudden gust from above changed everything. Armed helicopters roared overhead before setting down amidst the onlookers.

Stepping out of the helicopters were several sharply dressed men. Leading the group was a familiar face to Liam. It was the deputy minister of Ministry of Defense.

A sense of unease washed over Liam.

With a pleasant grin, the deputy minister said, "Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Sandoval, it's been ages. Would you consider taking a brief break from your feud just for me?"

Liam's hesitation was evident, but given the deputy minister's standing and his friendly demeanor, launching a public attack on the Sandoval family didn't seem fitting.

He acknowledged the deputy minister, stating, "The climax of the Hoffman-Sandoval conflict is upon us. Unless your business here is of utmost urgency, I'd advise you to step away. We wouldn't want any unintended casualties."

Unfazed, the deputy minister replied, "I assure you, my reasons for being here are crucial. Please, accompany me to a brief meeting. All will become clear."

Considering Abbott's keenness to halt hostilities and the deputy minister's insistence, Liam reluctantly agreed.

His animosity towards the Sandoval family could wait. He was curious about the deputy minister's intentions. Inside the Ministry of Defense building.

By the time Liam and the deputy minister reached the conference room, it was already bustling. Not only were there federal officials, but also some familiar faces.

Both Javier from the Ramirez family and Carville of the Padilla family were present.

Taking center stage was a senator from the federal government who was a dominant figure in the political field.
