

Chapter 1640 If Only Janet Could Have A Child

The quarrel outside the child's room was still audible.

However, Janet and Johanna ignored the commotion and focused on Anya instead.

"Anya, look at me," Janet cooed as she waved a toy in the air.

Anya turned her attention to the toy and wanted to grab it, but Janet moved the toy away before she could reach it.

Anya stared at Janet and Johanna with her big round eyes and giggled, saliva coming out of her mouth. She wasn't afraid of strangers at all.

Johanna carefully wiped the saliva from Anya's cheek and carried her out of her cradle expertly. She had taken a liking to Anya, and her heart softened when she saw Anya's toothless grin.

Janet was the only child Johanna ever had, but she was stolen as soon as she was born. Johanna had once adopted a daughter, but the daughter was nothing but trouble, disappointing Johanna and her husband very much. One could say that Johanna had everything she wanted in her life except children.

"Ms. White, you seem to like children very much." Laney walked in, carrying a plate of sliced mangoes and strawberries.

Johanna held Anya's soft fingers and replied jokingly, "It's not that I like children. It's just that Anya is too adorable. Just look at her cuteness! She will definitely be popular with boys when she grows up."

Laney covered her mouth and chuckled. "I won't worry about the boys. Garrett will deal with them before they can get close to Anya."

At the mention of Garrett, Janet looked out of the door unconsciously.

What happened? Why were Garrett's parents here again?

Noticing that Janet was absent-minded, Laney approached her quietly, attempting to surprise her. "What are you thinking about?"

Janet came back to her senses and smiled. "I was wondering if you had already opened our gifts."

Laney rubbed her face and chuckled guiltily. She had been very curious about the gifts, so she had already opened two of them, which happened to be toys for Anya.

"Hey! You didn't even prepare a present for me! They are all for Anya. You're so unfair." Laney puffed her cheeks and pretended to be pouting. Janet and Johanna exchanged glances and smiled.

"I knew that you would open the gifts, so I didn't put them together. I have yours right here," Janet said with a laugh as she took out a small box from her bag and stuffed it into Laney's hand.

Laney was pleasantly surprised. She didn't expect Janet to hide her gift. She received the gift and declared, "I should prepare a present in return. Look, you must stay for dinner tonight and try out Garrett's cooking."

Of course, Janet was willing. She turned to Johanna and was about to ask for her opinion when she realized that Johanna was busy playing with Anya. Johanna sighed and said under her breath, "If only Janet could have a child. I would visit her and take care of her child every day."

Laney smiled and comforted her, "It's not easy taking care of a child. Anya has been crying all night. I'm almost on the verge of depression."

Johanna looked at the door meaningfully and suggested, "You can ask Garrett's mother for help. I think she is quite free most of the time."

Laney smiled and replied indifferently, "Forget it. I wouldn't count on them."

Seeing Laney beginning to sulk, Janet stood up and changed the subject. "Well, let's stop talking about them. I've got something to ask. How did you know that you were pregnant? Did you have any signs? I remember you have many books about pregnancy. Mind if I have a look?"
