

Chapter 1637 You Will Have Your Own Child So...

As Janet was still in the process of recovering, she decided to take some time off from work. With Brandon away, she roamed around the vast house, finding herself with ample time on her hands.

"Don't wander much. Are you feeling hungry? Why don't you join me for breakfast?" Johanna kindly interrupted Janet's exploration.

Janet turned to Johanna with a sheepish smile and confessed, "I didn't have any particular plans after getting up, so I thought I'd go for a little stroll."

Johanna ladled a bowl of soup for Janet and inquired, "I've heard that you're getting ready for pregnancy. How about I take you to see a doctor after breakfast? We should start with a check-up, and I'll request a thorough examination. Also, we need to ensure that the medication you're currently taking is safe for pregnancy."

Janet accepted Johanna's suggestion, so after finishing breakfast, they went to the hospital. Upon seeing Janet, the doctor didn't immediately think of her as a patient because she appeared exceptionally healthy.

Hearing the doctor's praise of her daughter's health, Johanna couldn't help but feel elated. She covered her mouth with her hand and beamed. "My daughter underwent treatment previously, and everyone says that she's made a remarkable recovery. We're here at this hospital because I'm hoping you can provide tailor-made medication for her. She's currently preparing for pregnancy, and I'm concerned that her prior medication might have adverse effects on her body."

The doctor reassured Johanna, saying, "Don't worry. Our hospital is renowned for its excellent patient care."

Johanna was well aware of the hospital's reputation. She said with sincerity, "I kindly request that you reevaluate my daughter's physical condition and recommend the most scientifically sound treatment."

The doctor's eyes gleamed with curiosity as he asked hesitantly, "It seems you're looking for the finest medicine tailored to your daughter's specific health needs."

Johanna nodded eagerly, affirming, "I've heard that your hospital excels in crafting the best personalized medicines, which is precisely why I've chosen it. Naturally, I want nothing but the very best for my daughter."

Anticipating the doctor's discussion on costs, Johanna preemptively expressed her generosity. "I'll provide a two-hundred-thousand-dollar deposit. After all, I insist on nothing but the best medication for my daughter."

Impressed by Johanna's generosity, the doctor's face lit up with delight. "Certainly. Please accompany us for the physical examination."

Two female nurses escorted Janet into the state-of-the-art examination center.

The assessment proceeded quickly and smoothly, with Janet completing all the tests in under two hours. Since Janet had been examined by Frank previously, Johanna didn't experience the same level of anxiety as before.

"It's quite pleasant here in this hospital." Janet and Johanna were sipping coffee in the lounge, awaiting the test results.

Their experience had been top-notch, with two attentive nurses assisting Janet throughout the check-up.

Johanna's smile grew broader as she observed Janet's satisfaction. "This is an exclusive hospital for the affluent. Naturally, the service is unparalleled compared to public institutions. Since you're pleased with it, we'll continue with the subsequent examinations at this hospital."

"Let's take it one step at a time. Spending two hundred thousand in total is acceptable, but it's quite extravagant if I have to do it every time I visit a doctor. You and Dad don't have unlimited funds to spare." Janet expressed her reservations regarding the cost.

She then picked up her phone and checked it, discovering that Laney had posted pictures of the breakfast Garrett had prepared, along with several adorable photos of Anya.

Johanna also noticed the images of Anya and was captivated. "Laney's child is growing up so quickly, and she's absolutely beautiful."

Janet gazed at Anya's photos, her emotions shifting subtly, yet her smile remained somewhat restrained.

Johanna sensed Janet's change in mood and was concerned that she might be overthinking. To reassure her daughter, she offered comforting words. "The doctor here is highly skilled. You'll have your own child soon, don't worry."

Janet understood that her mother had misunderstood her, so she responded with a reassuring smile. "I just think the child is adorable and pleasant to look at. It's nothing to be concerned about."

An hour later, a nurse approached them, indicating that Janet's examination results were ready.

Johanna was surprised by the quick turnaround and promptly stood up, inquiring, "Can we discuss the medication now?"

At that moment, the doctor emerged from behind the nurse, wearing a regretful expression. He explained, "Regrettably, we're unable to prescribe medication for now. Following the recent examination, we detected some abnormal data in your daughter's physical condition. To ensure her future well-being, we need to send her examination data to our pharmaceutical partner for evaluation. Only after this evaluation can we determine if they are willing to accept your order."
