

Chapter 1144 Master The Power

Three days later, at the foot of Sparta Mountain.

Liam had been here for three days. His efforts had paid off. The area was significantly quieter, with far fewer skirmishes between the strange creatures that lurked there.

He had set up camp at the mountain's base.

These past three days of relentless combat had earned him a substantial sum of points.

But the gains came at a cost. A dark aura had begun to accumulate around Liam.

Anyone looking into Liam's eyes would see them bloodshot and fierce, a mark of the darkness building within.

This troubled Liam.

Why, he wondered, were other creatures in this illusionary trial unaffected by the dark aura? In the meantime, he was forced to spend most of his energy and points to keep his dark aura in check.

He knew that losing control would mean succumbing entirely to the darkness, becoming a mindless, rampaging beast.

After a glance at the Refreshing breeze pill at the points store, Liam shook his head.

The Refreshing breeze pill barely had any effect on him now. Its power had dwindled to just a tenth of its original strength, yet the price remained a hefty hundred points. It simply wasn't worth buying anymore.

On a brighter note, Liam had become much more adept at wielding his special power. The fierce battles over the last three days had not only tested his limits but also propelled his abilities to a significant milestone: sixth rank of six-star.

Normally, such a breakthrough would be a cause for celebration.

Here, however, it meant Liam had to face even stronger adversaries to gain more points.

In the fight for power, sheer numbers held the advantage. This would become increasingly obvious with increasing strength.

Despite this, Liam accepted his new reality with a smile.

After all, any increase in strength was a positive step.

Thankfully, Liam's combat efforts had paid off, allowing him to acquire the Origin Technique, "Rage of the Earth".

This was his first Origin Technique, and he was committed to mastering it.

However, the need to suppress his dark aura hampered his training, inevitably slowing his progress.

Mastering an Origin Technique, like any other training, required diligence and practice, a concept Liam understood well.

The essence of the Origin Techniques lay in controlling special powers through spiritual power and merging them with a Primogem Warrior's innate power.

"Rage of the Earth" specifically focused on manipulating the special power of the earth element. It utilized the earth's unique spreading properties to deliver a powerful shock to the target.

When used effectively, it could be incredibly potent.

However, its effectiveness was limited to warriors below
the seventh level.

Flying became possible for Primogem Warriors at level seven and above. Their strength granted them temporary flight without external aid. This also explained the affordability of Rage of the Earth at only five hundred points.

Liam was practical. He knew mastering too much power was unrealistic. While Rage of the Earth might lose effectiveness beyond level seven, it was perfectly suited for Liam's current stage.

After securing his surroundings, Liam focused on learning Rage of the Earth.

He began channeling his spiritual power to stimulate the technique.

The experience was otherworldly. It felt like he had built a miniature world within his mind, vividly capturing every detail of the technique.

Interestingly, Liam's spiritual power seemed to subtly increase during this process.

Half a day passed. Liam's eyes snapped open, a flicker of surprise crossing them.

He had mastered Rage of the Earth!

Eager to test his newfound skill, Liam channeled his special power of the earth element into the ground with a forceful palm strike.

The nearby earth responded instantly, bulging under Liam's control inch by inch like the surface of a boiling pot.

Upon reaching its target, the energy exploded spectacularly, leaving a significant crater in its wake.

A wide grin spread across Liam's face as he surveyed the crater.

He muttered under his breath, "Incredible! With more practice, I might even be able to use Rage of the Earth to harm the Zephyr Ape!"

Liam was overjoyed. This five-hundred-point Origin Technique was definitely a worthwhile investment.
