

Chapter 1149 Conspiracy

Liam paused briefly, realizing that the woman in white might have assumed he hailed from a civilization similar to hers.

Apparently, she was unaware of his method of arrival here.

However, what truly concerned Liam wasn't whether the woman was aware of his true origin.

Liam muttered to himself, "Upon entering the sixth rank, eight-star battle zone, each alien and human I encounter exhibits distinct independent thoughts. Could this indicate the authenticity of them?"

The more he contemplated, the stronger his conviction grew.

Then, Liam told the woman in white truthfully, "I originate from a small blue planet, distinct from your civilization. A series of coincidences led to my presence here."

Reflecting on Carlden's words, Liam sighed and continued, "My home planet, Blue Star, is under threat from advanced civilizations across the universe. Those advanced civilizations' goal is to assimilate all life forms on Blue Star. While their plan hasn't commenced, it's on the horizon. Hence, I'm here, striving to enhance my strength."

This was Liam's real concern.

His desire to increase his strength stemmed from two primary reasons.

The second reason was to swiftly rescue Julie and Asher from the clutches of the Duncan family.

Upon hearing Liam's explanation, the woman's demeanor softened, and she responded with a resigned sigh. "Blue Star isn't alone in encountering these challenges. Numerous planets in the universe face similar dilemmas! The alien civilizations you mentioned are just one faction. Above those civilizations lie even mightier species! Each species possesses formidable champions who elevate their species to superior standings in the universe! This is why our human race has established various academies, such as the one I represent, to nurture such formidable individuals."

Liam nodded subtly, casting a glance at the woman in white.

Evidently, the woman was among the elite of her academy.

Her words enlightened Liam, offering him a fresh perspective on Blue Star and the human race.

Contemplating the vastness of the universe, Liam sensed the profound plight of the human race even more acutely.

In the expansive universe, human civilization appeared exceptionally insignificant.

Then, a thought struck Liam, prompting him to ask the woman softly, "Can I ask you a question?"

The woman in white nodded, signaling for Liam to continue.

Liam inquired, "Every species in the universe possesses unique racial abilities, yet why do humans lack such powers?"

The woman in white shook her head before explaining, "It's not that we lack any special ability. Our strength lies in balance. While we may not possess exceptional strengths, we also don't have significant weaknesses. Those racial abilities you mentioned? Humans can acquire them through diligent effort. That's our advantage as humans! But the true reason for our disadvantage in the universe stems from an ancient conspiracy."

Liam took a moment to gather himself, sensing he was on the verge of uncovering profound secrets.

Observing Liam's intense focus, the woman in white understood his eagerness for knowledge. Without holding back, she delved into recounting history.

"Humans used to be among the top ten races in the cosmic council. However, our favorable position didn't endure. Our remarkable ability to learn and adapt made us targets, leading several races to unite against us. This alliance aimed to suppress our strength, resulting in significant losses for us in numerous battles. The most tragic aspect? Many smaller civilizations within our ranks got separated due to these conflicts!" she said.

After a pause, she continued, "The leaders of these civilizations were forced to retreat, unable to reconnect with us. This isolation prevented us from reinforcing our bloodlines, causing a decline in our overall capabilities. Over time, this has contributed to our current situation, where various races within the myriad tribes perceive us as easy targets."
