Chapter 1247 Extraordinary Talent

It came as a shock to everyone, and disbelief hung heavily in the air.

The Human Clan's Primogem Warriors all began their cultivation from scratch. This put them at a distinct disadvantage compared to members of other races, who were born with extraordinary strength.

In the highly advanced Cosmic realm, even newborns of the Human Clan must embark on their cultivation journey without any inherent advantages.

Typically, it would take nearly a century for a member of the Human Clan to reach the status of a level-ten Primogem Warrior.

Even the most gifted among them usually needed seventy to eighty years to achieve this rank.

In the esteemed City of Divinity, the recognized prodigies often took forty to fifty years to reach such heights.

Yet, the bone age of Liam, currently in the testing chamber, was revealed to be mere twenty-eight years old!

How could those present so easily accept this?

The room fell silent, struggling to grasp this anomaly. Then, skepticism broke the silence.

"No! The Stardust Crystal in the testing room must be malfunctioning!"

"I agree! Reaching level ten as a Primogem Warrior at twenty-eight is utterly implausible!"

"Christos, it's time to replace the Stardust Crystal!"

There was no malice in their voices; they were merely astounded by Liam's unprecedented display of talent, finding it difficult to come to terms with.

Christos called for order, "Be quiet!"

He was certain; the Stardust Crystal was not at fault.

Liam's test results were accurate.

By now, Liam had exited the first test room and proceeded to the second, a space reserved for evaluating talent in privacy, where the results were known only to the individual tested.

After Christos watched Liam enter the room for his talent test, he was still reeling from shock.

He eagerly anticipated the outcome of Liam's next assessment, given the rarity of a twenty-eight-year-old level-ten Primogem Warrior status, a feat that seemed almost fantastical.

Even the renowned Human Sovereign, Emperor Hoffman, had reached level ten at thirty-two.

Christos' heart raced with excitement. He planned to relay Liam's exceptional results to the senior leaders of the Human Clan.

A talent like Liam's demanded significant investment and nurturing; overlooking such potential would be a grievous oversight for the Human Clan.

Meanwhile, in the second test room, Liam was oblivious to the stir his age had caused in the Sanctuary of Human Sovereign.

He was already deep into the test.

Before him stretched a translucent, vast starry expanse teeming with creatures from various clans—the Insect Clan, the Primitive Beast Clan, and the Tauren Clan, all radiating an aura similar to his, marked as level ten, one star.

Liam understood that this test was designed to simulate actual combat.

A voice then announced, "The test is about to begin. Please eliminate the aliens in the starry sky as quickly and efficiently as possible. Your score will depend on the speed and the number of your kills."

After the announcement, the voice faded away.

But Liam's focus was not on this.

His eyes were locked on the celestial battlefield ahead. He was prepared to unleash his full strength.

Liam was ready to excel in the test for a better future platform.

Because before he had come here, Lindy had told him that if he wanted to have a better platform to develop his power in the future, he must try his best in the test and get the best results.

This way, it could also help him find and rescue Julie and Asher sooner.

Therefore, Liam was very determined now.
