

Chapter 1273 The Embryo Of The World Lord

Liam felt an instant chill down his spine, his skin prickling uneasily.

Confronted by an unknown creature, fear gnawed at his heart, preventing him from staying calm.

The fear of the unknown pushed him to consider retreating.

But every risk brings a chance.

Liam decided to move forward cautiously, keeping his senses sharp.

He wasn't sure how long he had been walking when he reached a huge pit deep underground.

There, he stumbled upon something unimaginable: a massive, exposed heart.

"A heart?" he muttered in disbelief.

The enormous heart was obviously the source of the earlier heartbeat.

Liam was stunned as he examined the massive organ, feeling like it had always been there.

He desperately searched his memory for ancient texts that could explain this but found nothing.

Liam, desperate for answers, turned to Emer once more for help.

As soon as Emer laid eyes on the heart, he gasped out loud, "Master, this is the heart of a World Lord! It's not fully formed yet. This only happens when a life-bearing planetary system evolves. This heart's the beginning of a World Lord. Once it absorbs enough energy, a World Lord will be born from it!"

Liam's eyes widened in realization and shock.

Finding the embryo of a World Lord was more than he had ever expected.

He figured out right away why the nearby plants had been dying: this heart had sucked up their life force.

Now that he knew the cause, Liam knew he could fix the problem.

He had two choices.

One, smash the heart and stop the World Lord from being born.

Two, help the heart grow and the World Lord get born.

The plants would get fed by the World Lord once it was born, making farming easier and better.

For most folks, the easiest and best pick was the first one.

After all, it would get the job done easily and ensure they finished the task.

If it worked out, the rewards would be huge.

Because that meant absorbing all the energy in the embryo.

That pure energy would bring massive benefits!

But even though the first option was tempting, Liam kept a clear head and didn't let greed take over.

He had met a World Lord once—Lancy on Blue Star.

Liam liked Lancy and knew World Lords were naturally good beings.

World Lords never hurt anyone on purpose. Liam couldn't bring himself to stop a life from having a chance to live.

So, he picked the second choice right away.

Emer being there would speed up the World Lord's birth, so Liam could finish his task.

Plus, Liam chose that option because a World Lord's birth was rare and vital, symbolizing hope and the planet's future rise.
