

Chapter 1288 He Has Underestimated Liam

As Liam prepared to leave, Caden, suddenly thinking of something, asked, "By the way, how old were you when you started your training as a Primogem Warrior in your Celestial Realm?"

Liam responded instantly, "I started training when I was 21."

Surprise flickered across Caden's usually calm face, his eyes widening momentarily.

In the Cosmic realm, it was customary for people from Human Clan to begin their training at five years old.

Caden had thought that Liam had followed this path, which explained his remarkable abilities.

To reach level ten as a Primogem Warrior in just over twenty years was impressive, though not unheard of among the prodigies of the Central Divine Domain.

But the revelation that Liam had only begun his training at 21 astounded Caden.

It meant that Liam had ascended to his current level in less than a decade.

Such an astonishing talent was unheard of, even in the Central Divine Domain and the City of Divinity.

With this realization, Caden acknowledged he had significantly underestimated Liam's capabilities.

This insight filled Caden with both awe and excitement.

He resolved to travel to the City of Divinity personally and inform the Citadel Guardian about Liam's capability.

After answering Caden's question, Liam said goodbye.

His mind was focused on one thing: enhancing his strength and authorization level as soon as possible.

Time was pressing. He was determined to save Julie and Asher soon.

Liam then entrenched himself in a strict regimen, shuttling between missions and solitary training sessions.

This schedule swiftly elevated his skills and point tally...

Six months later.

Liam had ascended to authorization level three.

His power had reached the peak of level ten as a Primogem Warrior, and he was on the cusp of unlocking the law power of his special power.

During the intense six months of training, Liam had transformed completely.

He was now capable of holding his own against an average Primogem Expert.

Despite this significant leap in ability, Liam remained unsatisfied with his progress.

At his current pace, ascending to the Primogem King level would still take a long time.

Frustrated, Liam felt a growing impatience. Without swifter advancement, he risked being overshadowed by other exceptional talents, endangering his prospects of becoming the Citadel Guardian's disciple and rescuing

Julie and Asher.

Just then, an idea struck him.

He realized merely focusing on cultivation was not the most efficient path to amplify his strength. Without the trials of actual combat, the primogem energy within him would not experience profound transformation.

With this insight, Liam looked towards the distant horizon, his resolve hardening.

He decided to venture into the true battlefield where myriad races clashed.

His life-draining ability to absorb the primogem energy of his foes and convert it into his own strength promised a rapid rise in power.

"Through the crucible of real combats, my strength will surely skyrocket!" he muttered.
