With high hopes from Lancy and Flame, Liam turned away and departed from the earth's core.

His journey to the center of the earth had been greatly rewarding.

He had also kept track of the time.

Now, only two weeks remained until his departure to Genesis Island, where he would challenge the Lord of the War God House for the presidency.

Liam felt a surge of excitement.

He was now powerful enough to compete against an eighth-level Primogem Warrior. With this newfound strength, Liam could approach the upcoming challenge with the Lord of the War God House with great confidence.

Thinking of this, his excitement grew, and he increased the speed of his Lightning Wings.

The following day, Liam arrived at Mount Moria.

The president was there with Carlden, both eagerly awaiting Liam's return.

The moment they saw Liam return safely, the worry etched on their faces vanished.

Carlden stepped up, patted Liam on the shoulder, and grinned. "Liam, did everything go smoothly on your trip?"

Liam responded with a smile and a nod.

Then, the president inquired, "Liam, did you manage to obtain the Genmo?"

After all, retrieving the Genmo was the reason the president had sent Liam to the earth's core. Without the Genmo, the president would have reservations about letting Liam challenge the Lord of the War God House.

When Liam heard his mentor inquire about the Genmo, a spark of happiness lit up his face.

He chose not to speak further, instead simply unveiling his formidable aura.

Instantly, an aura indicating the peak of level seven filled the air. To their astonishment, the president and Carlden noticed that Liam's power was almost on par with an eighth-level Primogem Warrior!

This revelation greatly shocked both the president and Carlden. They hadn't anticipated that just one Genmo could elevate Liam's strength to such an incredible extent.

Filled with awe, the president couldn't help but exclaim, "My disciple, your talent is astounding! I assumed that absorbing the whole Genmo would at best elevate you to the seventh level with six stars. Yet, here you are, astonishing both Carlden and me with such a remarkable leap!"

Upon hearing these words, Liam decided not to conceal any details of what he had encountered in the earth's core. He confessed, "Master, I actually didn't find the Genmo you mentioned at the earth's core. Nevertheless, even though the Genmo was absent, I came across an unexpected treasure. That is what propelled me to this level. In addition, I have a piece of news that might just alter the destiny of Blue Star!"

The president, caught off guard by Liam's statement, paused briefly. Then, as if struck by a sudden realization, he quickly asked, "Liam, did you come across the world master in the earth's core?"

Liam confirmed with a nod.

Carlden, hearing this, appeared slightly confused. He was yet to grasp what exactly the term 'world master' implied.

The president noticed Carlden's puzzled look. With a warm smile, he explained, "The so-called world master is essentially the ruler of a world. Since Blue Star is a small world, it naturally has its own world master."

Carlden acknowledged this with a nod.

The president then turned his attention back to Liam, his tone now filled with astonishment. "Liam, since you've met the world master, how did you manage to leave unharmed? Usually, the world master wouldn't interact with the beings of their own world. And on the rare occasions they do, the outcome is either expulsion or outright destruction."

At this, Liam sighed inside.

Indeed, his mentor was correct. Had he not possessed World Power, he would certainly have been obliterated by the fireball that Flame had unleashed.

However, the topic of World Power was tied to his heritage. Liam decided not to disclose to his mentor that he was the son of Emperor Hoffman or that he possessed World Power.

After all, revealing either of these facts would have been too astonishing.

So, Liam simply shook his head and replied, "I don't know why."

Changing the subject, he said, "By the way, the world master of Blue Star took the form of a little girl. Upon meeting me, she started a conversation and revealed that she had intentionally exposed Blue Star's location to attract powerful entities from the Cosmic realm to take her away. I believe, because of that, our world was discovered by the civilizations of the Cosmic realm. That's the reason the Blood Clan sent the Saint Society to take over Blue Star!"
