

Chapter 1346 The Law Power Of Death

After a rapid voyage on the Stellar Cruiser, Liam and Cecil made it back to the main city swiftly.

Cecil knew that Liam had recently grasped the law power of the wood element and needed some time alone for cultivation. So, he said, "I'll leave you to your seclusion. Whenever you get a chance, drop by the No. 75 planetary system. Our Vaughn family would be delighted to host you!"

Liam responded with a slight smile and a nod. "Sure! I'll make sure to visit the Vaughn family if I get the opportunity!"

After parting ways with Cecil, Liam stepped into a training chamber, secured ten days of training time in the Sea of Laws, and got ready for a focused cultivation session.

Liam had already mastered the law power of metal, wood, water, and earth. If he could unravel the last piece, the law power of the fire element, he would be set to unlock the five elements' law power.

Achieving mastery of the five elements' law power would significantly boost his strength!

Liam settled his mind, used his spiritual power, and gently merged it with the Sea of Laws.

He had a clear goal: to harness the law power of the fire element. He currently had no interest in other elemental powers.

Therefore, he guided his spiritual power toward the law power of the fire element within the Sea of Laws.

Chapter 1346 The Law Power Of... +120 Points at most

However, just then, an odd law power with a distinctive aura suddenly emerged before him.

He frowned. He was encountering such a scenario for the first time.

Typically, it was the practitioners who sought out the law powers, not the other way around.

Observing the law power now entwined around his arm, Liam was uncertain of its purpose.

Was it drawn to him because it found something appealing on him?

Driven by curiosity, Liam closely inspected the law power. This inspection revealed that the law power was laden with a dense death aura.

Moreover, the color of this law power was a lifeless dull gray, starkly contrasting with Liam's vibrant law power of the wood element and life force.

Upon discovering that this law power was steeped in the essence of death, Liam was startled as he now realized what this law power represented...

It was the law power of death!

Practitioners skilled enough to harness the law power of death were exceptionally rare, as mishandling this law power could lead to severe repercussions.

Undoubtedly, the strength of the law power of death was formidable!

It was particularly effective in group combat scenarios, enabling its wielders to curse and annihilate large numbers of adversaries with Fatal Hex.

Nonetheless, the strength of the cursed foes could not surpass the strength of the practitioner wielding the law power of death. Despite this and the significant risk of backlash, many still coveted the law power of death.

The precarious situation of the Human Clan was clear for all to see.

The Rosefinch Galaxy was managing slightly better, but in the other three major galaxies, vast alien armies launched attacks daily.

Owning the law power of death meant that one could slaughter enemies more efficiently.

This was crucial because the Human Clan had implemented a unique enemy-killing point system. In this system, eliminating foes of equivalent strength awarded special points. Therefore, possessing the law power of death would transform the battlefield into a veritable gold mine for its holder, who would no longer need to worry about accumulating points.

To wield the law power of death effectively, one needed to possess something akin to the death element.

Liam was an ideal candidate for this!

He already commanded the Malicious Aura Domain.

It was likely that the Malicious Aura Domain within him had drawn this law power of death to him.
