

Chapter 1349 The Sea Of Death

Ameer understood the underlying motives of Emperor Hoffman's actions. But out of respect for him, he praised, "As expected of Emperor Hoffman! Such vision!"

The City Lord rolled his eyes and said, "Just keep praising him! That old rascal, upon learning that Liam was nearly killed by the Blood Clan's Primogem Emperor, ventured alone into their domain! He forced one of their Primogem Deities to retreat, and had that Primogem Deity not surrendered the Blood Sovereign's blood essence, he would have killed him. He thinks I am unaware of this. He may act noble, but he is clearly worried about Liam's safety!"

Ameer managed a smile. When it came to Emperor Hoffman, he avoided delving too deeply into such conversations, much less sharing his views about Emperor Hoffman. He chose to act as if he had heard nothing.

Noting Ameer's discomfort, the City Lord casually dismissed him, "Alright, you can go now. I've discussed with Emperor Hoffman about the matter. I will personally mentor Liam. This decision is final, unless Liam himself rejects it in the future."

Relieved, Ameer nodded and quickly rose to leave, not daring to linger for fear the City Lord might divulge more startling information.

Prior to arriving at Celestial Palace, he had been keen on finding a suitable mentor for Liam.

He had not anticipated Liam's background to be so formidable, backed by both Emperor Hoffman and the Forge Regal. In the entire Human Clan, aside from the City Lord and a few other eminent figures, no one was qualified to mentor Liam.

But this realization brought Ameer some comfort; he felt relieved that such a remarkable talent would not go unnoticed.

Yet, just as Ameer was about to depart, he noticed that the City Lord suddenly frowned.

Surprised, Ameer looked at the City Lord. He realized that the City Lord must have detected something amiss for his usual calm demeanor to be disrupted.

With this thought, Ameer quickly turned back and inquired, "City Lord, what's wrong? Have you sensed something amiss?"

Ameer had only meant to ask casually, aware that if there were any significant issues, he might be beyond his capacity to deal with them.

Nevertheless, the City Lord was forthright and replied, "I've just detected movements of the law power of death in the Sea of Laws. It seems someone has disturbed the Sea of Death, causing all the law power of death within to become agitated!"

Upon hearing this, Ameer was shocked.

The Sea of Death!

It was a forbidden area within the Human Clan!

Although Primogem Deities, with their immense power, could theoretically erase the Sea of Death, the Human Sovereigns believed that the volatile law power of death it contained would be beneficial for the Human Clan. So, they had decided to only seal the Sea of Death.

But the Sea of Death was still a danger to the Human Clan.

If the law power of death within the Sea of Death were to erupt, the human territories could be overwhelmed by its destructive power, which could potentially result in vast casualties.

Realizing the gravity of the situation, Ameer felt a surge of anxiety.

This was no minor issue!

Any oversight of the matter could lead to catastrophic consequences for the Human Clan!
