

Chapter 1319 Refusing To Fight

After a lengthy chat with Everett, Liam realized how refreshingly straightforward Everett was.

When Everett found out that Liam was entering this month's arena battles, he burst into laughter. "This time, I'll be in the crowd, watching you take down those guys!"

Liam could only smile as he walked alongside Everett to the Human Sovereign Arena.

Upon their arrival, Everett quickly grabbed a spot in the stands, not even considering a foray into the ring himself.

As Liam stepped onto the arena's stage, the crowd's cheers thundered through the space.

"Liam! Liam!"

Indeed, Liam was a celebrated competitor at the Human Sovereign Arena now.

The news of his arrival spread quickly, drawing those who initially hadn't planned to attend.

The chants of his name echoed around Liam, and he couldn't help but feel a bit resigned.

He wasn't keen on being the focal point, yet silencing the crowd was not an option. He certainly didn't want everyone to dislike him.

Soon, his opponent made an appearance in the ring.

Liam eyed the stats floating above his adversary's head, noting he was a level-four Primogem Expert outside the arena.

In this arena, however, the power of contestants was normalized to a specific threshold.

Both Liam and his rival found their abilities reduced to level ten with one star as a Primogem Warrior.

His expression serious, Liam did not underestimate his adversary, despite his series of wins.

As the commencement signal echoed, Liam readied his stance.

Unexpectedly, his opponent exhaled deeply and said, "I surrender!"

The intensity of Liam's presence was just too overwhelming.

It was common knowledge that Liam was invincible when matched at this level.

Rather than depleting his energy in a hopeless fight, Liam's opponent chose to conserve his strength for future battles.

Liam was taken aback by the effortless victory.

Nevertheless, he acknowledged the win and awaited his reward.

However, puzzlement set in when he saw the message on the Network of Human Sovereign.

"What's this? Why didn't I receive any points for this victory?" Liam wondered whether there was a glitch in the Network of Human Sovereign.

Thankfully, the Network of Human Sovereign quickly provided a clarification: "Points are not reset with the monthly cycle. Participants need to continually set new personal records to receive corresponding points."

This revelation left Liam feeling resigned.

Now aware that he wouldn't earn any points until he notched eight consecutive victories, Liam felt his enthusiasm for battles wane.

As disappointed murmurs spread through the audience, he opted out of the next match, thus forfeiting his chances for the month.

Liam's primary reason for coming to the Human Sovereign Arena had been to accumulate points.

Upon learning that he wouldn't see any reward until his eighth straight victory, he didn't want to participate in the fight anymore.

While he could start earning points after achieving eight consecutive wins, he doubted his ability to triumph in the ninth match.

After all, he would be taking on a level-ten nine-star Primogem Warrior as a level-ten one-star one. The gap in strength seemed insurmountable. Deciding it was prudent to enhance his capabilities and deepen his understanding of the Primogem Warrior's prowess, he resolved to return to the Human Sovereign Arena once he was better prepared, aiming to sweep the battles of the Primogem Warrior level in a single, decisive win.

Chapter 1320 Why Don't You Let Us Tag Along

After turning down the invitation to the next arena battle, Liam descended from the stage.

Everett approached quickly. "It's such a pity, really! You opted out of continuing the fight this time! I was truly eager to witness your battle and revel in the event!"

Noticing the disappointment on Everett's face, Liam offered a reassuring smile. "It's wiser to hold off until I've grown stronger before I proceed. Otherwise, I might barely scrape through to the eighth match and be too worn out to advance to the ninth."

Everett grasped Liam's logic and nodded in agreement.

His expression lightened as he said, "Chad just got in touch with me. He's on his way here and would like to invite you to his No. 10 planetary system for a drink. What do you think? Do you want to go?"

Liam paused for a moment and then declined politely, "I'd prefer not to. My main aim is to rapidly enhance my strength and clearance level. Unless there's a matter of importance, we should part ways for now. I'm looking to undertake some tasks."

Everett wasn't upset by Liam's refusal. Instead, he clapped his hands approvingly and said, "That's great! It's been ages since Chad and I embarked on a mission. Why don't you let us tag along? Our schedules have been quite empty recently, and we're eager to acquire new experiences to overcome our training plateau."

Liam had met his fair share of eager companions before, yet none as fervent as Everett and Chad. But he could sense their genuine intentions.

Moreover, Liam knew both Everett and Chad were esteemed Primogem Kings.

Their willingness to join him on his missions indicated their high regard for him.

A second refusal might appear ungrateful.

Thus, Liam nodded in acceptance. "Alright, if you're sure, you guys can join me. I'll thank you for your help in advance."

Everett responded with a dismissive wave of his hand and a laugh. "Think nothing of it! It's really no trouble at all!"

Of course, the reality was more complicated than Everett let on.

In addition to Everett's desire to forge a friendship with Liam, there was a deeper motive behind Everett's eager demeanor.

Following Liam was in fact a directive personally issued by Caden to Everett and Chad.

Caden had been keeping a watchful eye on Liam, so he knew about Liam's encounter with the Dark Mist King on the No. 76 resource planetary system.

Concerned for Liam's well-being during his missions, Caden had explicitly tasked Everett and Chad with the responsibility of ensuring Liam's safety.

While Everett didn't believe anyone could pose a real threat to Liam, he couldn't dismiss an assignment that came directly from Caden.

Moreover, Everett was sincere in his wish to develop a strong rapport with Liam, which made him all the more willing to accept Caden's directive.

Chapter 1321 Feathered Gold

Chad quickly arrived at the mission room and joined Liam and Everett.

Given Chad and Everett's longstanding friendship, their meeting was naturally full of playful exchanges.

Shortly thereafter, with Chad and Everett by his side, Liam walked up to the task assignment machine to choose a mission.

Liam had headed straight for the machine dispensing level-four missions, catching Chad's and Everett's attention.

Everett asked, "Liam, are you sure you're in the right place? The level-three mission machine is just behind you."

Everett meant no disrespect; he simply wanted to make sure Liam wasn't mistaken.

Liam casually responded, "No mistake here. I'm qualified for level-four missions now. I've gained level-four clearance."

Upon hearing this, Chad and Everett were both shocked.

Everett humorously tugged at his ears, double-checking he had heard Liam correctly.

A third-stage Primogem Expert with level-four clearance? How was that even possible?

Was Liam some kind of genius?

Both Chad and Everett exchanged surprised glances, unable to hide their astonishment.

"Liam, you're something else! We're considered geniuses in our planetary systems, but next to you, we're practically losers!"

Liam just smiled and turned his attention back to the machine, meticulously choosing the level-four mission he wanted.

He soon settled on a mission titled "Finding Feathered Gold".

Upon reading the details, Liam discovered that the mission involved locating a special metal known as Feathered Gold.

Feathered Gold could be used for crafting and valued at 100 special points per piece.

However, this was not what piqued Liam's interest.

What truly intrigued him was that Feathered Gold could help trainers understand the law power of the gold element.

Liam knew well that grasping law power wasn't a matter of chance; it often required specific opportunities and aids.

For most trainers, understanding law power necessitated external resources, something like the Sea of Laws, which was an exceptional aid.

This task of finding Feathered Gold was not particularly challenging. It only required at least three pieces of Feathered Gold for a reward of 300 task points.

Liam had little interest in the 300 task points. In fact, for a level-four mission, the reward was relatively low.

Liam reasoned that the low reward was due to the key element being Feathered Gold.

Liam was filled with anticipation now.

After all, his attempts to master the law power of the five elements had always been hindered by a lack of significant breakthroughs.

He believed that understanding some of the law power of the gold element by using Feathered Gold might substantially enhance his comprehension of the law power of the five elements.

