

When His Eyes Opened Chapter 937

Chapter 937 However, when she recalled Elliot's words, she could feel as if a fire was burning in her heart and dispelling the coldness.

At the police station, Henry came as soon as he received a call from the authorities.

The first person he saw when he entered was Elliot, and he immediately lowered his head.

"This is the situation, Mr. Foster. Your driver set fire to the old mansion earlier tonight. Do you know anything about this?" a police officer asked Henry.

Henry shook his head. "Not at all. I gave him a severance payment a few days ago, and we haven't been in contact since then." After a pause, he continued, "I need to explain everything to my brother!"

The police officer glanced at Elliot and excused himself when he saw that Elliot did not object to Henry's suggestion.

Henry walked up to Elliot and explained, "Elliot, please let Joseph go! He's been my driver for more than half his life! He has been with me since he was still young! It's because of his loyalty to me that he did what he did. I would've stopped him if I knew he was planning this."

Elliot was unmoved.

"How about this, I'll pay to repair and maintain the old mansion," Henry tried negotiating. "I didn't order him to do this. If my intentions were truly malicious, I would've burned your place instead of the old mansion, since it's basically an empty house with nothing inside." Elliot looked at Henry's exhausted face and opened his thin lips to say, "I'll believe you...for now. You need to restore the old mansion to its original state or I won't let Joseph go."

"Okay." Henry's expression was solemn. He looked like he had something else he wanted to say, but in the end, he merely sighed. "I'll be going then if that's all."

The feud between the two brothers was a very sad sight.

As Henry left, Elliot looked at him from behind and was overwhelmed with compassion as he said, "You should keep the money from the house sale to yourself, Henry. Don't let your useless son spend it all!"

Henry's eyes turned red and he felt choked. "Cole isn't just useless; he's stupid as hell too. But at the end of the day, he's still my son. I won't be able to just wash my hands of him! Aren't you a father too? You should understand how I feel."

If Henry told Elliot that in the past, the latter would have found it difficult to understand what the former meant.

At that moment, he sympathized with Henry aed little. Elliot's love for his three children was beyond the control of reason. He was never fixated on the idea that his three children had to be good people. He just wished for them to be healthy andie safe.

Who knows what path they might take in the future? They may turn out to be mediocre at best, and stray down the wrong path at worst.

If one of his children did eventually go astray, could he be that cruel as to sever his ties with that child? Perhaps94 not.

Back at Starry River Villa, Avery took a shower and lay down on the bed, with Elliot's low pitched voice echoing constantly in her mind.

Had that fire not happened, she would not have inadvertently revealed that she still had feelings for18 him.

Now that he knew about her feelings, she made herself seem a little too passive.

She unlocked her phone and texted Tammy to complain. (Hey, Tammy. Are you asleep? There was a fire in the old Foster mansion tonight. Did you see the3 news?) Tammy replied after about five minutes. [I did.]

Avery's emotions calmed down somewhat when she looked at the two-wordcb reply. Tammy's mood seemed to be off. Avery sent a message and asked, [Are you and Jun alright?] (Yeah. He didn't touch me again after that past failure.) [I knew he won't push you. He loves you very much.] [I love him too. The more time I spend with him, the more I feel like I can't live without him.)

Tammy's eyes were moist when she sent that message

Jun was so kind to her, but she could never love him as she did before. She always felt that she was broken and unworthy of him.

The next morning, Avery was woken up by her blaring cell phone. In a daze, she reached out blindly to find it and answered her call.

"Avery! Do you know where Tammy went? She wasn't at home when I woke up this morning, and her phone was turned off when I tried calling her! I can't find her anywhere right now! God, I'm going to lose my mind soon!" Jun said anxiously.

When His Eyes Opened Chapter 938

Chapter 938 Avery sat up from the bed startled after being jolted awake by what she heard. "I have no idea what's going on with her! She was fine when she slept last night." Jun's voice was low and choking as if he was about to cry. "I have a feeling that she's hiding on purpose! She definitely regrets it and doesn't want to be with me anymore! We already agreed to remarry on the seventh of July this year..."

"I texted her last night and she told me she loves you very much," Avery comforted, "She said that she's finding it more and more difficult to be separated from you, so I'm confident that she doesn't have any regrets. I'm sure she won't want to break up with you either. She probably just went off to do something."

"If that's the case, why would she be hiding it from us?" Jun calmed down a little. "Could she have gone to see a psychiatrist?" "It's not impossible." Avery got off the bed. "Stay calm, Jun. I'll find her." "Where?" Jun could not figure out where Tammy could be. "I recommended a psychiatrist to her the other day, so I'll check if she went there."

"Thank you for the trouble. Please inform me as soon as you have any news about her. I'm worried sick right now."

"I will."

Avery tried calling Tammy after ending the call with Jun.

The voice prompt stated that she had switched off her phone. Avery opened the messages that they exchanged last night and read them again. She did not notice anything unusual when they texted each other the previous night, but as soon as she reread the messages, it was obvious that Tammy was unhappy.

There would usually be an influx of emojis if Tammy was in a good mood.

She did not post a single one of them in the previous night's messages. Avery rued that she had overlooked Tammy's unhappiness. Tammy might not have gone and hid somewhere if only Avery had realized it the previous night.

After a while, Avery came out of the room and prepared to headie out.

Mrs. Cooper stopped her at once after realizing that she did not eat any breakfast. "Are you feeling better today, Avery? Where are you going in such a hurry? Have some breakfast before you94 do!" Mrs. Cooper would not have been that worried if Avery was not having that time of the month. "I have no appetite," Avery said anxiously. "Tammy disappeared to God knows where and I have to find18 her."

"What happened? Did she get into an argument with Jun?" Mrs. Cooper frowned. d3"No."

"You don't look so good, Avery. You should have something to eat or else I'm the one who's going to be worried if you leave like this." Mrs. Cooper took her arm. "Tammy isn't a child anymore. She's probably taking a walk to calm herself down because she's in a bad mood. Nothing's going to happen." Avery corrected her. "Tammy's not in a bad mood. Have you heard about post-traumatic stress disorder? It's a mental illness that often escapes attention. It might be harmless for a normal person to be in a bad mood, but for Tammy, it could put her life incb danger."

Mrs. Cooper realized that she had said misspoke and immediately apologized. "Okay, Avery. I'll go get some food and you can eat in the car."

Trust Capital's headquarters was in Rosacus City, which was just next to Avonsville.

Chelsea had practically remained in Rosacus City after taking over Trust Capital. One of the reasons was because a clean-up of the headquarters' personnel was required, and she had not completely started her work yet. The other reason was her disfigurement-she did not want to appear in public too much.

On that day, Chelsea donated to several local charities in the name of Trust Capital. The donation campaign was held in a five-star hotel in the city.

Countless reporters and cameramen had taken their respective places at the venue.

Chelsea walked into view with bodyguards and executives surrounding her. She was clad in a black uniform that streamlined her figure and emphasized her capability, and a blue mask was worn to cover her disfigured face.

As long as she did not show her disfigured face, she could still pretend that she was a normal person!

When she took her seat on the stage, a hotel attendant came over to her with a glass of water. Chelsea looked up at the person and realized that she knew the person!

When His Eyes Opened Chapter 939

Chapter 939 Chelsea was just about to call her bodyguard when a sharp dagger sliced across her fair, slender neck! Elsewhere, in Avonsville , Avery went to the psychiatrist that she had introduced to Tammy

The psychiatrist confirmed that Tammy never contacted him.

Avery then went to the cafes that she used to go to with Tammy...

After two hours of searching, Tammy was still nowhere to be found.

She called Tammy again but her phone was still switched off. The messages she sent had also elicited no reply. Where could Tammy have gone? Where else could she be? Avery sat in the car and stared blankly ahead. She was at a loss as to which direction she should drive toward.

Just as she was about to lose hope, she received a call on her cell phone! Her heart was beating anxiously! It was a call from Elliot. She grabbed her phone and immediately answered it. "Go home, Avery. We found Tammy's whereabouts."

Her tensed-up heart relaxed immediately and she asked nervously. "Is she alright? Where did you find her?"

"She's in Rosacus City. I'm going there now with Jun to pick her up," Elliot said calmly.

He did not want to scare Avery, but he knew that he could not hide it from her either.

Chelsea's hometown was in Rosacus City and Trust Capital's headquarters was there as well. Furthermore, Tammy had no relatives or friends in Rosacus City, which meant that there was only one reason why she went there-to find Chelsea!

Avery felt that it was risky enough if Tammy had found Chelsea in Avonsville. After all, Chelsea was a sly and cunning person who had plenty of tricks up her sleeve. Someone like Tammy would never be a match for her.

Tammy's decision to run all the way to Chelsea's turf and cause trouble there was no different from digging her ownie grave!

"How is she, Elliot?! Tell me!" she yelled hysterically. She could sense that something had happened to Tammy because there would not have been any reason for Elliot to personally take a trip to Rosacus94 City. "She's fine." Elliot frowned as he tried comforting her. "We'll bring her back safely. You can go back home and wait for our updates." She breathed a sigh of relief. "You'd better not lie to18 me!"

"I wouldn't dare." Avery was relieved after receiving Elliot's answer and droved3 home. When she reached, Mrs. Cooper immediately served up a tableful of food and urged her to eat.

"I'm pretty sure you didn't eat the breakfast I packed for you this morning," Mrs. Cooper said. "You must be hungry rightcb now." "Yeah, I am a little hungry." She sat down at the dining table and looked at the sumptuous lunch. Her appetite had returned slightly. "By the way, Mike called and said he was coming back for lunch, but you don't need to wait for him. Go ahead and start eating." Mrs. Cooper handed her the utensils. "Thanks."

After eating her fill, she went to the living room and played with Robert. When Mike came back and saw her, he immediately blurted out, "Tammy is one brave girl! Can you believe she went to assassinate Chelsea? She should've just paid someone to do it rather than do it herself. Her resentment must've clouded her judgment to the point where she doesn't even care about her own life!"

The calm on Avery's face disappeared instantly. "Did you just say that Tammy went to assassinate Chelsea?" "Yeah! Didn't you know?" Mike asked in surprise. "Tammy put a knife on Chelsea's neck and took off Chelsea's mask to embarrass her in public. But unfortunately, Chelsea's bodyguards captured Tammy. The whole process was filmed by countless media personnel at the scene, and the complete video is already available online! Tammy is now being held inside a police station in Rosacus City. Elliot and Jun have gone there to get her out!"
