

Married At First Sight Chapter 3579

Married At First Sight Chapter 3579 – Enzo and Avah often start fighting over toys after just a couple of minutes. Enzo always loses to Avah and ends up crying, attracting the attention of the adults.

Sometimes, when Enzo can't win, he throws himself at Avah. They can both sit up but are still a bit wobbly. Enzo's trick usually works—he knocks Avah down and then bites her.

Though they both lack teeth, they still bite each other. Whether it hurts, only they know. But no matter what happens, it usually ends with Enzo crying.

When Avah wakes up and sees her mother nearby, she wants to follow her. Avah is smart and doesn't cry often, but she knows how to mimic her brother's howl to get attention. When she does, her mother gently picks her up. It turns out that the crying child does get the milk.

Seeing Serenity, Avah opened her arms, asking to be held. Serenity, noticing Jane didn't mind, leaned over and picked Avah up.

Serenity knew it's often advised for pregnant women not to hold others' children, but since Jane didn't mind, she didn't worry.

Jane wasn't concerned about superstitions. As long as her children liked the person holding them, she was okay with it.

"Avah woke up early," Serenity commented while holding her and walking beside Jane.

Jane replied, "She usually wakes up at dawn, plays a bit, eats, and then goes back to sleep until noon."

Serenity kissed Avah's cheek and said, "She's probably hungry. Feed her some milk powder, and she'll likely fall back asleep."

Avah rested her head on Serenity's shoulder, hugging her neck with both hands. This tender gesture melted Serenity's heart. She smiled at Jane and said, "No wonder my grandma wants to take Avah home—she's too adorable to resist."

Jane chuckled and mentioned, "Grandma York probably feels awkward visiting often because we watch her so closely when she's here. She jokes that we guard against her like she's a thief. Last time she visited, she told my grandma she'd have a great-granddaughter one day and would bring her over too. She insisted my grandma won't be the only one with a great-granddaughter."

Serenity laughed, "Those two old ladies are like playful children."

“Grandma loves girls. She treats us granddaughters-in-law like her own granddaughters.”

Before Serenity married Zachary, she had always liked the old lady, and the feeling was mutual; otherwise, Zachary wouldn't have been pressured into marrying her.

“Seren, are you worried?” Jane asked with concern. “Did you not sleep well? You just got here yesterday, and you're up so early today.”

Jane was worried Serenity wasn't adjusting well. When she saw Serenity walking in the yard, she rushed out, leaving her still-sleeping husband and son behind.

When Ben and Enzo woke up, and Enzo didn't see his mother, he'd start crying and wake the whole household.

Married At First Sight Chapter 3580 – There was no need for an alarm clock—Enzo's daily crying always brought everyone back from their tasks.

During the day, the nanny and old lady cared for Enzo, while Jane and Ben worked. They only had time with him in the mornings and evenings.

But every day, when Enzo woke up and didn't see his mother, he'd cry for a long time until someone calmed him down.

Ben often joked that Enzo was trying to steal Jane from him, which made her laugh and cry. Jane never complained that Ben treated Avah like a princess. If Ben teased that Enzo was stealing Jane, then Avah must be trying to steal Ben, too. When Ben held Avah, he was a doting father, completely focused on her.

“It's not the bed,” Serenity replied. “I had a dream and couldn't fall back asleep. So I went for a walk. The air is so fresh in the early morning, especially after last night's rain.”

“Let's sit in the pavilion,” Jane suggested, reaching out to take Avah back to give Serenity a break.

After sitting in the pavilion, Avah snuggled in Jane's arms and dozed off, holding tightly onto Jane's clothes as if she didn't want to be put back to bed.

Avah felt safe and comfortable in Jane's arms, soothed by the familiar rhythm of her heartbeat.

Serenity said, “I dreamt of my parents and two strangers. The dream made me feel like the strangers were my grandparents. I think my mother might have found my grandmother.”

Jane nodded, "That sounds likely. They're mother and daughter—they're bound to reconnect."

But Serenity was more worried about the situation in Jensburg. She had been thinking too much, which led to her dream.

Serenity's parents died in a car accident when she was ten. If it weren't for some old photos, her memories of them would be even fainter.

"Seren, don't worry too much," Jane reassured her. "I'm sure everything will work out, just like it did with my mother's family. Things were tense for a while, but it all ended well. We have to trust our families. If they don't want us involved, it means they're confident they can handle everything."

Avah fell asleep in Jane's arms. Jane adjusted her hold to make Avah more comfortable, tucking in her clothes to keep her warm.

Serenity watched Jane's gentle care and instinctively placed a hand on her slightly swollen belly. Her baby was still asleep, quiet inside her.

After breakfast, the baby would be more active, and she'd feel the little movements. The baby moved the most between 7 and 9 pm. When she or Zachary interacted with the baby, it would play happily for a while before settling down around 10 pm.

After figuring out this routine, the couple only interacted with the baby between 7 and 8 pm, so it could calm down afterward.

"I know I have to trust them," Serenity said. "But it's hard not to worry at all. I know if I go there, I won't be much help and would only distract them. That would just get in their way. Since they've kept it from me, I'm pretending not to know. But how can I not worry? All the people in Jensburg are my closest family and friends."
