

Married At First Sight Chapter 3711

Married At First Sight Chapter 3711 – Holden had been present when Clarissa made her will, and at the time, he didn't dare to object. The will stated that if Clarissa passed away before him, half of her private property would go to Kathryn, her biological daughter, who was to take over the family business. The remaining half would be divided equally among their three sons.

Shiloh was left out. The will only mentioned that before they discovered Shiloh wasn't part of the Farrell family, she didn't have to return what she had received and could continue using it. As for Holden, Clarissa's husband, he wasn't given anything directly. Instead, the will stated that his three sons would support him in the future. How much pocket money they gave him was up to them, not Clarissa.

After a long silence, Holden said, "Even if everything is divided as your mother wanted, you're still my child. Don't you have to take care of me in my old age?"

Kathryn replied, "I never said I wouldn't support you, Dad. If my brothers can't do it, I'll make sure you have enough money to live on. I won't let you starve."

Kathryn wouldn't abandon her father in his retirement, but this had nothing to do with her taking over the Farrell family business. She added, "Whether or not I take over the business has nothing to do with supporting you. Even without it, I can afford your expenses. You have four children. Are you really worried we can't support you?"

Holden, frustrated, responded, "It's not just about giving me a few hundred dollars a month. I want to live in a big villa, with a luxury car, and have servants to take care of me. I'm old, and life isn't easy. I need more than one servant—several, actually. If you don't take over the family business, where will you get the money for all this? How much of your mother's property do you think you'll get, even if she favored you?"

Holden wasn't sure how much private property Clarissa had, but he assumed it was a lot. After taking control of the family, Clarissa had worked hard to privatize much of the family's assets. Holden guessed it must be worth hundreds of millions, maybe even billions.

As he thought about all that money, resentment toward Clarissa flared up again. Why should he feel sad? He had been under her control for decades. Now that she was gone, he should feel relief, not grief.

His main concern now was to secure his own benefits. If he couldn't claim Clarissa's wealth, at least he could expect his children to treat him like the patriarch of the Farrell family. The real frustration was that he had made himself an eunuch, or else he could've found another partner.

Kathryn looked at him for a moment before speaking. “If you’re asking about my mother’s personal wealth, there isn’t much. But over the years, she gradually merged the family business with her personal assets, so there is a significant amount.”

“My mother killed both my aunts. My younger aunt had no children, so there’s no one to compensate. But my eldest aunt had descendants. As my mother’s daughter, even though she’s gone, I feel obligated to make amends to my eldest aunt’s family.”

Hearing this, Holden’s expression darkened. He glared at Kathryn and snapped, “Are you trying to drive me to my grave? You’re going to give all your mother’s wealth to Audrey and her family?”

Married At First Sight Chapter 3712

Married At First Sight Chapter 3712 – “Your mother worked tirelessly for the Farrell family for decades. Even though her position as the head of the family was taken from her, her contributions are undeniable. Whether or not she was successful, she put in the effort. The property she has now is well-earned.

Don’t think you can do whatever you want just because she’s gone. If you dare to give away her property to Audrey and others, I can’t stop you, but your three brothers can sue you.”

Kathryn remained calm and said, “If nothing extreme had happened, we would all just divide the property according to her will.”

Holden grew uneasy and asked cautiously, “What do you mean? Didn’t your mother leave everything to you? Did she change her will later on?”

Kathryn didn’t answer directly. Before, Clarissa had wanted to send her away and had even brought Pedro over to entrust everything to him, telling Kathryn to take her wealth and leave. Kathryn hadn’t followed through with her mother’s request, but she suspected Clarissa may have altered her will after that.

After arranging her mother’s funeral, Kathryn had to calm the concerns of both the family and the company. While everyone was working as usual, there were whispers about who would take over the Farrell Group. Kathryn wasn’t in a hurry to deal with Clarissa’s estate. If Holden hadn’t brought it up, she wouldn’t have focused on it just yet.

Later, she would ask a lawyer to review the will and see if Clarissa had changed it or left everything to her. Regardless, Kathryn felt responsible for compensating her aunt’s descendants, knowing her mother owed them that much.

Many of Clarissa’s assets had been taken from the company, and some of the family’s charity funds were privatized by her. Kathryn didn’t intend to keep any of this; she planned to return it all to Audrey. Whatever Audrey did with it would be her choice.

“Dad, I won’t keep it all. My three brothers still have their share. I know they haven’t treated me well, but we are still siblings. They’re in their thirties and aren’t very capable. Without the Farrell Group, they’ll struggle. Even though they have their own businesses, the income isn’t much, and they still need to support their families.

So, I’ll make sure they get their share. What I do with mine is up to me. I know you can’t force me to change my mind.”

Holden understood that Kathryn might seem fragile, but she was tough, just like her mother. The only difference was that Kathryn was fair and reasonable. Once she made a decision, not even Clarissa could have changed it. Just like how Clarissa had tried to send Kathryn away several times, yet she always returned, much to her mother’s frustration.

Kathryn added, “Dad, focus on getting better. When you’re well, you can leave the hospital and come home for the New Year. My brothers are grown men. Even if they aren’t wealthy, they have more than most people could ever dream of. As long as they live honestly, they’ll be fine.”

Married At First Sight Chapter 3713

Married At First Sight Chapter 3713 – Kathryn didn’t know exactly how much money her three brothers had. Even though her mother thought they were useless, she still helped them make money while she was alive. Kathryn guessed they were worth tens of millions, if not hundreds of millions.

With that kind of money, how could they complain about being poor? What could they possibly be worried about?

Still, if Kathryn didn’t take control of the Farrell family, her brothers might not survive in Jensburg. They weren’t capable and had always relied on the Farrell Group and their mother’s protection. But with new leadership, no one would shield them anymore, and the Farrell Group wouldn’t let them behave as they pleased.

Even if Kathryn took charge, she wouldn’t allow the Farrell Group to cover for her brothers. Plus, Audrey’s side of the family had always been at odds with theirs. Whether Audrey or Liberty took control, her brothers would have a hard time.

If they were smart, they’d sell off their assets, turn them into cash, and leave Jensburg. That way, they could still keep some of their wealth. If not, they’d end up with nothing and might even be forced to live on the streets.

Kathryn wasn’t feeling generous enough to constantly support her brothers. She wasn’t going to sacrifice herself for them.

“Why compare yourself to ordinary people? You’re special!” Holden urged. He didn’t want to let go of his wife’s wealth and wanted to fight for his sons. Softening his tone, he said, “Kathryn, I know you’re kind. You feel like your mother made mistakes. Sure, she wasn’t perfect, but she was still your mother.

“If she knew what you were doing, she’d be furious. You’ve got so many nieces and nephews. What if your brothers run out of money? You know they’re not very capable, so don’t act rashly.

“Audrey’s family and the others aren’t short on money. Audrey is married into the Stone family, which is second only to the York family in Wiltspoon. Liberty’s sister is the eldest lady of the York family, the richest in Wiltspoon, worth hundreds of billions.

“They’re all wealthier than our Farrell Group. They won’t even care about the little compensation you offer. And do you really think they’ll forgive your mother just because you give them money?

“Kathryn, you and they are enemies. There will never be peace. Audrey’s mother was killed by your mother, and Audrey and her family forced your mother’s death. Your parents and their family are sworn enemies.

“So why be soft-hearted? They won’t appreciate it.”

Holden handed Kathryn a cup. “Pour some water for your dad. I’ve talked so much, and now I’m thirsty.”

Kathryn poured him a cup of warm water without complaint. As she did, she overheard him calling Marco.

She didn’t care.

What could he tell Marco? Marco didn’t have the authority to make decisions for her. Until Audrey or Liberty took over, Kathryn was in charge of the Farrell family.

Married At First Sight Chapter 3714

Married At First Sight Chapter 3714 – Marco couldn’t change Kathryn’s decisions, and she wasn’t afraid of pressure from her father or brothers. If she couldn’t handle that, she didn’t deserve to be the head of the Farrell family.

Holden didn’t say much on the phone, just asked Marco to come to the hospital. Once Kathryn poured him a cup of water, he hung up.

Kathryn acted as if she hadn’t noticed and handed him the cup. Holden, feeling parched from all his efforts to convince her, drank it all in one go.

Holden said, “Kathryn…”

But Kathryn interrupted, “Dad, enough. I can take care of everything. As your children, we are responsible for supporting you. I’ll match whatever my brothers give each month. You won’t go hungry, but the rest is up to your sons.”

Their mother’s will clearly left Holden’s care to the three brothers. Kathryn would chip in based on her mood.

“Dad, rest well. I need to head back to the company—things have been unstable lately,” she said, turning to leave.

“Kathryn!” Holden called out. When she turned to him, he warned, “If you dare hand over everything, I’ll never forgive you! Remember, I’m your father!”

Kathryn smiled sarcastically. “Dad, you don’t get to control me. Mom couldn’t, and you certainly can’t.”

Holden shouted, “You think I’m scared? I won’t let you go!”

Kathryn replied, “Yes, you’re my father. But so what? I’m a Farrell, and I’ll be the head of this family if I choose to. You don’t get a say in that.”

She walked back to his bedside, leaned in close, and locked eyes with him, making her determination clear.

“Dad, listen carefully. You couldn’t control Mom when she was alive, and you can’t control me now that she’s gone. Just because I’m your daughter doesn’t mean you can tell me what to do.”

Kathryn sneered, “Do you know why Mom shot you? She knew exactly what you’d do. She knew that once she was gone, you’d try to boss me around and hold me back. She was right about you. You barely survived, and now you’re already trying to control me.”

She continued, “Dad, I’m Clarissa’s daughter. You know what kind of person she was. I’ve inherited most of her traits. You’ll get your monthly allowance out of respect for our father-daughter bond. But if you don’t appreciate it, don’t expect me to be kind.

Oh, and let’s be honest—we never really had a father-daughter bond. Your love went to your sons and Shiloh, not me, your real daughter. If you push me too far, life won’t be easy for any of you. I won’t kill anyone like Mom did, but I’ll make sure you regret it.”

Kathryn straightened up, ignoring the shock on Holden’s face. Coldly, she said, “Dad, the decision you made with Mom when you found out Mr. Jimenez was alive was probably the smartest one.”

Married At First Sight Chapter 3715

Married At First Sight Chapter 3715 – “Dad, get some rest. Don’t ruin your life, and don’t ruin your three sons’ lives either. Don’t push me, because I have no patience left for you!” Kathryn said before turning and walking out.

Holden wanted to call out to her, but no words came. He could only watch her leave with anger and resentment.

Once Kathryn was out of sight, Holden cursed, “Ungrateful daughter! That horrible Clarissa gave me this ungrateful daughter!”

“How dare she speak to her father like that! Doesn’t she fear karma?”

“If you don’t listen to your father, you’ll regret it later. She’ll lose all the benefits she’s worked for. I’ve never seen such a fool!” Holden was furious that Kathryn ignored his advice and spoke to him so harshly, but he couldn’t do anything about it.

Kathryn’s strength reminded him too much of her mother. At first, Holden thought Kathryn was spoiled. Even though Shiloh’s biological parents hadn’t treated Kathryn well, Kathryn still managed to stand strong. Now, Shiloh’s relatives were too scared to even approach Kathryn.

Shiloh’s death must have taught them a lesson. Only the old butler had been punished for what happened to Shiloh, and the rest were spared because Kathryn acknowledged they had raised her. But if they tried to take advantage of her now, they would face the same fate as Shiloh.

As for Shiloh, whom the Farrell family had raised for over 20 years, they had given up on her. No one dared to test the Farrell family’s patience again.

Kathryn walked out of the hospital’s inpatient department.

Pedro was waiting at the door. When he saw Kathryn, he walked over and draped a coat over her shoulders, saying, “It’s cold outside. You should wear something warmer.”

“I’m not cold,” Kathryn replied, but she still accepted his gesture.

They walked toward the hospital parking lot together.

Pedro asked, “Did things not go well with Mr. Janzen? You didn’t look happy when you came out.”

Kathryn was quiet for a while before answering, “My mother’s past worries weren’t for nothing.”

Pedro realized that Holden had tried to take advantage of her. “Did Mr. Janzen make unreasonable demands?”

“Not unreasonable,” Kathryn replied, “but our relationship isn’t like a normal father and daughter. He doesn’t care about me, and I don’t care about him.”

Pedro opened the car door, and after Kathryn got in, she removed the coat he’d given her. Once Pedro joined her inside, she continued, “My dad wants to divide the assets my mom left behind. But in her will, she made it clear that her personal property wouldn’t go to him. She must have never fully trusted him, worrying he’d use her assets on other women.”

“My mom didn’t want her wealth benefiting anyone else. Even when my dad moved into the house, he had no real authority in the Farrell family. She was strong-willed, and he had no say. Despite his frustrations, he couldn’t challenge her.”

“My mom’s will stated that my three brothers would take care of him in his old age, but I think she changed her mind later. Now, with everything going on, I’m overwhelmed and haven’t had time to address her estate.”
