

Married At First Sight Chapter 3742

Married At First Sight Chapter 3742 – “Trenton, you’re siding with Camryn now, but one day you’ll regret it. She’s pretending to be harmless while secretly scheming. Do you really think she’s helping you out of kindness? She’s trying to gain your complete trust so she can take everything from you.

If she pushes us out, it’s her way of getting revenge on our parents—and us. Especially you. She’s being nice to you now to drive a wedge between us.”

“Second sister!” Trenton interrupted firmly, “Don’t speak like that about our eldest sister. She’s not that kind of person, and I trust her completely.”

Carrie was so angry she wanted to hit him.

She regretted not convincing their mother to keep Trenton at home instead of sending him to boarding school. Maybe if they’d grown up closer, he wouldn’t have been swayed by Camryn. But even as a child, Trenton always supported Camryn.

“Fine, fine, I won’t say any more. You’ll see for yourself one day when you lose everything and realize who your real sister is. But let me tell you, Trenton, I’ll fight Camryn to the end.

I might not be able to defeat her now, but that doesn’t mean I’ll stay under her thumb forever. Just wait—one day, when she loses everything, that’s when I’ll strike back.”

Mr. Labbe had promised Carrie that once her task was done, he would help her get revenge on anyone she wanted.

Carrie’s plan was to ruin Camryn and take away everything she had. She had become one of Mr. Labbe’s many mistresses, and when the time was right, she would make sure Camryn suffered too.

Her ultimate revenge fantasy was to make Camryn a mistress to an ugly, violent man and watch her be abused. Carrie also dreamed of flaunting her relationship with Callum in front of Camryn, making her so angry that the York family would throw her out.

These thoughts gave Carrie a twisted sense of satisfaction, fueled by Mr. Labbe’s empty promises.

“Second sister, have you done something wrong?” Trenton asked cautiously. “Be careful not to let people use you. Remember how our aunts treated you? Don’t make the same mistake.

No matter how strained things get between us, we’re still family, and blood is thicker than water. Don’t let anyone manipulate you into hurting our eldest sister. Think about how you've treated her before. Has she really done anything to harm you? Why do you hate her so much?"

Carrie responded bitterly, "She stole my man and married Callum. How could I not hate her? She kicked me out of the Newman family mansion—my home for over 20 years—and took it for herself."

Trenton was confused. "When did my brother-in-law become your man? Are you saying you hate our eldest sister because you have feelings for Callum?"

He finally realized that Carrie was jealous of Camryn's relationship with Callum. He hadn't seen it before, but it was now clear to him.

Callum was an exceptional man—handsome, successful, and from a good family. It wasn't surprising that Carrie would be attracted to him. But this revelation still stunned Trenton.

Carrie added, "Mom always said she would create opportunities for me and Callum. He should have been mine, but your precious eldest sister married him first. I don't know what kind of luck she had or what tricks she used to make him fall for her."

Trenton was speechless. He couldn't believe what he was hearing.

"Dear God," he thought, "can a lightning bolt just come and wake her up from this ridiculous fantasy?"
