After setting a time to meet with Frank, Brandon ended the call.

Then, he and Janet exchanged silent glances. They quickly got ready and drove to the restaurant.

Frank was already there when they arrived. Sitting quietly in a corner, he stared out of the window at the busy traffic.

Janet and Brandon sat across from Frank, looking at him in silence.

"Elizabeth just means she's still young and not in a rush to get married. It's not that she doesn't want to marry you. I couldn't explain it well on the phone earlier, Frank. Please don't be so sad," said Janet.

Frank didn't seem as upset as she thought. He simply nodded and replied, "I understand."

Janet was slightly taken aback. Was Frank now acting tough? Or was the impact so severe that he was still disoriented?

She felt torn, unsure of how to comfort Frank.

"Hey, why do you both look so down? There's no need to worry. What I need to do now is find a way to solve this, not dwell on feeling upset. Anyway, thanks for letting me know how she feels." As he spoke, Frank handed the menu to Janet. "Order whatever you like. I'll cover the bill. But I've got something else to take care of, so I need to leave now.

"Hey, why do you both look so down? There's no need to worry. What I need to do now is find a way to solve this, not dwell on feeling upset. Anyway, thanks for letting me know how she feels." As he spoke, Frank handed the menu to Janet. "Order whatever you like. I'll cover the bill. But I've got something else to take care of, so I need to leave now. Please don't worry about me."

With that, Frank picked up his coat from the chair and left the restaurant.

Janet was puzzled and turned to Brandon, asking, "I don't get it. What's going on in his head? Is he taking it hard?"

Brandon took the menu and ordered some of Janet's favorite dishes. He replied calmly, "He said he'd figure it out. You've done your part, so don't worry."

Janet sighed helplessly. Watching Frank's retreating figure through the window, she felt sorry for him.

As night fell, a brightly lit mansion on the outskirts of the city came into view.

Alexandra, neatly dressed, sat in the courtyard, carefully watering his plants with a kettle.

These days, Brandon had instructed his people to keep an eye on him, so he didn't dare to take any action.

But he was content with this relaxed routine. He enjoyed spending his days tending to the plants.

Suddenly, the door swung open.

Stepping out of the villa, Sonia handed the phone to Alexandra.

Seeing Adriana's call, Alexandra frowned and said coldly, "End it."

Alexandra wasn't interested in Adriana. He had only approached her because of Janet. Otherwise, he wouldn't have had the opportunity to lace the scented candles with addictive drugs.

Now that Brandon was suspicious, Adriana was of no use to him. There was no need to stay in contact with her.

Sonia didn't know who Adriana was or what Alexandra was thinking. All she knew was to obey his orders.

With a blank expression, Sonia ended the call.

But just as Sonia turned to leave, the phone rang again.

Alexandra grew a bit impatient. He set down the kettle and answered the phone.

Putting on a friendly smile, he said, "Hello, Adriana. I apologize, I was occupied with work earlier. Why are you calling now?"

Sonia was surprised to see Alexandra's expression change so suddenly.

On the other end of the line, Adriana's voice was angry as she demanded, "Explain to me! Why did you spike the scented candles I gave to Janet with addictive drugs? What was your motive?"
