

Chapter 2042 The Difference Between Good And Evil

After work in the afternoon, Janet dropped Sonia off at the apartment arranged for her. Once everything was in order, Janet returned to her villa.

After Janet's departure, Sonia lingered at the door for a long time. Once she was certain there was no one around, she turned and entered the room.

As soon as she stepped inside, she retrieved a detector from her bag and meticulously checked every corner. Confirming there were no hidden cameras and noting only one surveillance camera in the living room, she finally relaxed.

She then hacked into the surveillance camera's security system, rendering it useless.

By the time she finished, it was late.

She took out her cell phone and sent a message to Alexandra, detailing Janet's actions for the day.

She added, "Nothing out of the ordinary today, just a call from someone named Draco and a rather airheaded individual named Lexi."

Alexandra called her shortly after.

"You need to sabotage her involvement in the fashion week. It must not proceed without a hitch. Frame Lexi for the mishap and drive a wedge between Draco and Janet. Isolate her that way!"

Sonia's brow furrowed slightly. "Draco is a close friend to Janet. Their bond seems quite strong."

"Impossible!" Alexandra's voice was sharp. "No way! Draco, a close friend? Only someone as naive as Janet would buy that. You must sow discord among them!"

"Understood," Sonia replied, her voice devoid of emotion.

Yet, doubt gnawed at her. She hesitated before asking, "Should I still keep her safety as the top priority?"

Her words were both a question and a test.

Janet was supposedly the person Alexandra despised the most. Yet, he hadn't directed her to harm Janet.

"Yes, keeping her safe is crucial for now. The better you protect her, the harder she'll fall later."

Sonia still couldn't wrap her head around it.

However, this was probably a good thing. If she had to do something about Janet now, she could...

Perhaps this was part of Alexandra's grand plan. He wouldn't deceive her.

With this in mind, Sonia ceased her objections.

"Okay."

After hanging up the phone, she set it aside and sat alone on the bed, hugging her knees and gazing out the window at the moonlight.

The moonlit summer night cast a serene glow over the mountain. The distant peaks stood solemn, the sky draped in a thin veil of twilight, sprinkled with the faint glimmer of stars. The flowers along the roadside bloomed with a sweet fragrance.

The moon, as always, listened silently to the thoughts of all living beings.

Since Alexandra had saved her, Sonia's resolve had never wavered.

She believed that whatever Alexandra wanted was her duty to execute without question.

But now, everything seemed different from how Alexandra had described.

Janet didn't seem like someone who deserved such a fate.

But then, who truly deserved to meet such an end?

Sonia was startled by her own thoughts. Was she now contemplating the nature of good and evil?

As Sonia was lost in her musings, her phone briefly lit up and then went dark again.
