Janet was enveloped by a warm wave of gratitude as Sonia's words sank in.

"Thank you," she said sincerely.

Sonia pointed towards the back door. "You should go in. I'll wait here. Call me if you need anything."

With the realization that something was wrong, Janet knew Draco likely wanted to speak with her privately. Sensing this, Sonia decided it was best to wait by the door.

"Alright."

With a subtle smile, Janet briskly swung the door open, scanning the room in search of Draco.

Upon entering the room, Janet heard the assistant's reproachful voice.

"You've botched something crucial! Can you handle the repercussions of the fashion show's failure?"

The assistant's face bore a mask of extreme anger directed squarely at Lexi.

Tears welled in Lexi's eyes as she explained, "I had no idea, I truly didn't. This isn't my fault..."

"How dare you argue!" The assistant's voice thundered.

Lexi cast a helpless glance at Draco.

However, Draco did not meet Lexi's gaze; instead, his eyes were fixed on the storage area of W Marks, where the clothes were kept, his expression grim.

"I swear I didn't do it. I..." Lexi began to explain, but her words faltered when she noticed Janet standing at the door. Her eyes brightened as if she had found a lifeline.

"Janet, you're here at last!" Feeling aggrieved, Lexi hurried over to Janet.

At the sound of the voice, Draco glanced up.

He was momentarily taken aback to see Janet had arrived so swiftly.

Upon recalling Janet's pregnancy, his expression shifted to one of concern. "Are you okay? Would you like to sit down and take a rest?"

"I'm fine. Thank you for caring." Janet smiled briefly before getting straight to the point. "Why did you call me here? And what new mischief has Lexi gotten into this time?"

"I summoned you here because of Lexi," Draco said regretfully, casting a glance towards a nearby dress. "Janet, see for yourself."

Janet directed her gaze towards the storage area.

The dress was a floor-length gown adorned with a phoenix motif. While the upper portion remained unharmed, the lower front had been maliciously scratched.

These garments were meticulously crafted for runway models to wear.

However, with such extensive damage, it was now impossible for a model to wear the dress.

"How could this have happened?"

Janet's eyes widened in shock. She was certain the dress had been fine during the last inspection.

"It's all Lexi's doing! I observed her admiring the dress recently, commenting on its beauty," the assistant accused, jabbing an angry finger at Lexi. "I thought she was merely appreciating it as a fellow designer, so I didn't suspect her. Who would have thought she'd sabotage our exhibit piece like this!"

"Lexi..." Janet attempted to defend Lexi, but the assistant interrupted her sharply.

"This dress was meant to be the centerpiece today, and now it's completely ruined." The assistant fixed a steely gaze on Janet. "Tell me, how do you propose we fix this?"

"But I had nothing to do with it." Lexi positioned herself in front of Janet to confront the assistant. Without evidence to support her innocence, she felt herself losing ground.

After repeatedly denying the accusation, Lexi was on the verge of tears, her eyes welling up with redness.

Unmoved by Lexi's tears, the assistant remained steadfast in her conviction of Lexi's guilt.

She snapped angrily, "Stop arguing! I reviewed the surveillance footage. You were the only one who returned here after everyone else had left, and we found your accessory at the scene!"
