

Chapter 1162 Crossed His Bottom Line

"Draco, wait for me!" In her high heels, Mandy pursued him.

She looked incredibly humiliated as she cried in the chilly night wind, ruining her mascara and leaving tears to run down her cheeks into two black streaks.

Mandy never expected she would be in this situation just a day ago. She had high self-esteem. But, her confidence had significantly eroded as a result of love.

Neither did Draco show mercy, nor did he turn around.

In fact, he was well aware that Mandy was not a bad person. She was just too self-willed. When it pertained to people and things she disliked, she had a habit of attributing all faults to others. She was a proud woman who believed she would never be wrong.

He was determined to teach her a lesson this time!

Mandy became increasingly tense as she watched him walk more hurriedly. She didn't anticipate that Brenna's approach would not only fail but that this time Draco would get even angrier with her because of the mistake.

It was only a matter of seconds until the green light turned red when she noticed that he was about to cross the road. Despite her best efforts, she couldn't catch up with him because she inadvertently stuck her high-heeled shoe inside the sewer's lid. 1

Draco hesitated when he heard a faint cry behind him but eventually decided against turning around.

Mandy's erratic personality and wealthy family background had affected her design career greatly and not in the good way. She would never mature or stray from the right path if she couldn't get through these challenges.

Mandy covered her face as she sobbed vehemently. Without a doubt, she didn't expect that she would have to suffer so greatly for a mistake.

"Mandy, stop crying." Brenna's voice came from behind. "Look at yourself. Now come back with me."

Brenna, who was quite concerned, decided to follow Mandy outside when she saw her pursuing Draco.

However, Brenna didn't appear to be doing well after being lectured by her husband. "Don't mind the shoes. Just throw them away and I'll give you better ones later."

"Mrs. Olson, I..." Mandy was so confused when she saw Brenna help her up that she was unsure of what to do. She'd just implicated her.

"Don't say anything. I'll take you back." Brenna was so patient with Mandy. All the guests present were distinguished people who would not make a fuss over such a trivial matter. Even so, as a diplomat, Ewing was slightly embarrassed.

After returning to the villa, Brenna drew Mandy into her room and asked, "What happened between you and Draco? I saw him ignore you and even walk away from you."

"He came here to blame me now that he knows everything," Her eyes flushed with anger and she cried even more sadly.

Brenna thought briefly and said, "What happened today must have something to do with Janet."

Mandy was not in the mood to reflect on Janet's actions.

But today, she realized that Draco also had his pride and ego as a designer. She realized she shouldn't try to use W Marks to make him lower his head because that crossed his bottom line.

She wiped her tears and said, "Mrs. Olson, refrain from interfering in this matter from now. I no longer want you to be worried about me. I'm sure Mr. Olson should be furious about what happened today. As for Janet, I have my strategy for dealing with her."

Mandy would have several chances after Janet left the W Marks studio to prevent Janet's new studio from operating.

"Silly girl, I just hope you don't suffer any losses. The party hasn't ended yet. Do you want to accompany me downstairs?" Brenna massaged Mandy's head gently, helped her find a pair of new high heels, and accompanied her to the banquet hall.

Despite the incidents, the party was only halfway through, and the rich ladies who had attended the party had not yet left.

Upon seeing Mandy emerge, everyone covered their mouths and chuckled. "Miss Hamilton, didn't you go after a man just now? Why are you back?"

"I just witnessed Miss Hamilton walk so quickly in high heels."

Several elegantly dressed ladies teased while covering their mouths.

Mandy blushed, embarrassed. She felt upset and tense, but she couldn't make a fool of herself at this time.

Brenna abruptly coughed, her eyes filled with displeasure. "You must have misinterpreted it. Mandy was just talking to me."

The ladies were compelled to give up because of Brenna's status.

Mandy had a bad day today and was not in the mood to converse. She sat quietly next to them and drank. When she looked around, she noticed Janet and Brandon holding hands and they happily walked away.
