

Chapter 1421 He Is The Mysterious Pharmacist

Disregarding the manic Jeremy, Brandon's eyes fell on Janet. Seeing her ashen complexion, a pang of anguish shot through his heart.

He didn't dare contemplate what might have transpired during the hours she was in Jeremy's custody.

"Janet..." His voice was soft and filled with remorse, as if he was worried that anything louder would scare her. He didn't want to tear his gaze away from her. "I'm here to save you."

"Brandon, get out of here! Please, just leave!" Janet's pleas were barely audible due to the drug's effects, her tears flowing freely. "Leave... just... get out of here!"

Witnessing their emotional exchange, Jeremy's laughter heightened, bordering on hysteria. "What a pathetic couple! Don't worry, I'll make sure you die together!"

With steely determination in his eyes, Brandon steadily advanced, declaring, "I'm here now. Release her."

"Don't move!" With a malicious grin, Jeremy raised his hand to stop Brandon.

In his hand was a syringe, its needle pressed against the delicate skin of Janet's neck. "If you proceed, I can't promise that I won't inadvertently harm your wife."

Brandon froze in his tracks, his eyes wide open. "I won't move any closer. Just don't hurt her."

A pool separated the two adversaries.

Brandon's gaze was piercing and ruthless. "Jeremy, I've followed your instructions. Let her go."

"Let her go?" Surprisingly, Jeremy nodded in agreement. He released his grip on Janet's arm and gave her a slight shove forward. "Certainly."

Without his support, the weakened Janet instantly started falling towards the pool.

"Janet!" Brandon's face turned ashen as he cried out and darted towards her.

Just as she was about to plunge into the pool, Jeremy snagged her collar, yanking her back to her feet. He steadied her in front of him once more, the needle positioned threateningly against the aorta in her neck.

"Don't come any closer!" With a scowl, Jeremy threw a glance towards Brandon, who had closed the distance to less than three yards. He feigned an attempt to pierce Janet's neck with the needle.

Brandon came to an abrupt halt, his eyes anxiously trained on Janet.

Fear and desperation clouded Janet's eyes as her body quaked.

She had... narrowly missed falling into the pool, teeming with unidentified creatures.

She could even detect the faint, briny stench emanating from the pool.

"Step back!" Jeremy demanded, keeping his gaze firmly on Brandon while the syringe pressed menacingly against Janet's neck. "Take another step back!"

Complying with Jeremy's instruction, Brandon retreated. His icy stare remained on the syringe in Jeremy's hand as he questioned, "What did you do to Janet? Why is she so weak?"

Seeing Brandon's distress and fear, Jeremy's mood elevated. In a boastful tone, he confessed, "I merely administered a small dose of a drug that would immobilize your wife for a couple of hours."

Upon hearing this, Brandon retorted angrily, "Didn't you assure me that if I complied, you wouldn't harm her?"

"Don't worry. The drug has no side effects and won't compromise her health."

"What are you planning? She's innocent!"

As though he had heard an amusing jest, Jeremy burst into laughter. "She's innocent? There were others just as innocent, but they're all dead now! Brandon, a deceptive and ruthless killer like you deserves hell!"

"What are you implying? Is there some deep-seated feud between us?"

Jeremy's sneer intensified. "It's irrelevant now. All you need to know is that if you don't comply, I will inject this syringe into the woman you cherish the most. The drug within it will end her life within a minute!"

Jeremy's tone was thick with unmasked arrogance
