

Ex Wife 1310

Chapter 1310

Leia frowned. "I can't say that either. What we have now should be extraordinary because we feel like killing each other."

Adam assumed that she was purposely showing off her romance, and he smirked at her. "Don't worry, Miss Osborne. We're adults; I get it. I just want to ask if you're interested in the entertainment industry. Do you want to get popular?"

"Popular?"

"Yeah, like being a fixed guest on this show. I'm sure we only need one season to make you popular given your character," Adam said confidently. He wanted to do Xavier the favor, and he also wanted to be successful. After all, he had directed so many shows, and now he had reached a bottleneck. If he could promote someone at this point, his career would grow to another level.

"What benefits will it bring me if I'm popular?" Leia raised her brows and asked him with a smile.

"There are a lot of benefits. You'll gain fame and profit, and when people slander you, your fans will help you fight them. What's more, you can meet your idols. Isn't that interesting?"

Adam sounded excited as he spoke, trying to persuade her.

"I can meet my idols?" Leia's eyes soon lit up. Previously, she was a pure fangirl, but ever since she got involved with Xavier, she had stopped. Now that she had decided to stop loving him, her buried fangirl instincts emerged again.

"Of course! I have quite a lot of connections in the entertainment circle. I'll invite your idol as a guest if you agree to be a fixed guest on this show. Tell me who you want to invite, and I'll call him right away to invite him. Wouldn't it be nice to be able to meet your idol?" Adam was quite persuasive, and Leia was very much tempted. Adam could sense that she was giving in, so he quickly asked, "Can you tell me who your idol is? Is it a member of a male team? Or is he a hero in an old drama who's gotten popular recently?"

"Both. Some of the idols I like are members of male teams or heroes in dramas. But there's only one I truly admire..." Leia looked up shyly. When she recalled her idol's elegant and handsome figure, she smiled like a love-struck fool.

"Who is it? I'm very curious."

"He keeps a low profile. He shot a movie a few years ago but he's under the radar when he's not acting. He never joins any variety shows, and there are very few interviews with him. So, it's useless even if I tell you—there's no way you can invite him to the show."

"Don't be so sure of that. You have to trust my connections. I'm a movie director, but shooting variety shows has made me more money for the past two years. The connections I have are beyond your imagination." He felt challenged by Leia's words.

"Okay, I'll tell you..." Leia rested her chin on her hands and said dreamily, "My idol is the aloof top actor with peerless talent and wit... Santiago Dalton!"

"Oh, your idol is Santiago. Well, you have great taste." Adam gave her a thumbs up. "Honestly, he's one of the very few I admire in the entertainment circle. He's great but he keeps a very low profile, so it's usually hard to find him."