

Chapter 644 The Dock

Feeling the urgency from Liam, the Black Serpent Squad's leader moved much more quickly than before.

In under thirty minutes, Liam and Yusuf, along with the squad leader, reached a building at the edge of a street.

The entrance featured a narrow set of stairs that could only fit one person at a time. Dim lighting shrouded the staircase, making it hard to discern what was happening on the second floor.

The setup was a typical base of Black Spider.

Liam gave Yusuf a nod, signaling that this was indeed the place they were looking for. One by one, they went upstairs.

As they emerged from the dark, the environment transformed. A broad open space lay before them.

By a rough estimate, the space exceeded four hundred square meters!

As they emerged from the dark, the environment transformed. A broad open space lay before them.

By a rough estimate, the space exceeded four hundred square meters!

Contrary to its modest exterior, the interior was opulent. Jewels were embedded in the walls, and in the glow of yellow lights, they shone brilliantly.

As Liam and Yusuf made their entrance, they were immediately encircled by a group of menacing guards.

The chief guard demanded, "Hold it right there! Identify yourselves."

The leader of the Black Serpent Squad quickly adopted a flattering grin. "We've come for a pickup!"

The chief guard's expression tightened, and he not only barred their way but also gave the leader not only barred their way but also gave the leader of the Black Serpent Squad a forceful shove.

"Get out! This isn't your place. If it's merchandise you're after, there are enough shops around!"

Faced with this response, the leader of the Black Serpent Squad retreated, sharing an awkward glance with Liam.

Liam frowned and moved a step closer, but he didn't bring up anything about the pickup.

If the opposition was this guarded, perhaps blunt honesty was the best approach.

Pondering this, Liam inquired, "Is Cannon around?"

The chief guard looked at Liam carefully. His gaze chilled further. "Who might you be? And why are you inquiring about him?"

Drawing on his sharp instincts, Liam quickly deduced something from the chief guard's behavior and tone.

Even if Cannon had left, he had certainly been here at some point.

Liam muttered to himself, "Seems like I'm in the right spot."

Hearing this, the guards tensed up further. One advanced and demanded, "Identify yourself! What's your business here? Speak now, or you can't blame us for what happens next!"

As he said this, he extended his hand toward Liam's shoulder.

Whoosh!

In a flash, the guard's head was separated from his neck, landing elsewhere.

A burst of blood erupted, obstructing the view of the remaining guards behind him.

Liam moved with startling speed, and before the others could grasp what had happened, he had snapped the necks of each remaining guard.

Finishing this, Liam frowned slightly, picked up a dagger from one of the fallen men, and hurled it behind him.

The sound of something heavy thudding to the ground followed the whistle of the dagger through the air.

It was the Black Serpent Squad's leader, who had tried to flee amid the chaos. Now, a dagger pierced his chest, his face locked in a grimace as he tumbled down the stairs.

With that handled, Liam and Yusuf pressed further into the base.

When they arrived at the innermost part, they found a small, lavishly furnished room.

Without uttering a word, Liam pushed the door open gently.

As the door swung wide, Liam spotted a one-armed middle-aged man lounging on a sofa, puffing on a cigar.

Seeing the two unknown invaders, the man remained unflustered.

Continuing to savor his cigar, he sized up Liam and casually mentioned, "I overheard your conversation outside. Looking for Cannon, are you? Too bad, he just left!"

Liam's brow knitted, as he asked, "Where did he go?"

Still composed, the one-armed man grinned. "He took off by boat, heading for Mosaico from Dock No. 7. Left about half an hour ago. You might catch him if you hurry."

Taken aback by the man's openness, Liam grew suspicious, wondering if this was some sort of trap.

Noticing the skepticism in Liam's and Yusuf's eyes, the one-armed man chuckled. "No need to worry. I'm not allied with Black Spider. I'm just a
