

Chapter 651 The Scheme Of Vivian

In the main cabin of the ship.

All eyes were fixed on the beautifully decorated wedding venue that Rennes had created. The wedding would be the grand finale of the casino festivities.

Meanwhile, in the luxurious first-class cabin, Nalani, the bridesmaid, was right by Julie's side, providing comfort during this trying time. Distress reeked off of Julie in flames.

With the mounting pressure of the day, Julie couldn't help but feel time slipping away like sand through her fingers. The end of everything was fast approaching.

Julie's heart sank as she thought of Liam, who didn't appear. Desperation washed over her.

Nalani, too, was on edge. Today was the day her daring plan had to be set in motion.

Liam's absence was unsettling, but Nalani couldn't simply stand there and twiddle her thumbs.

The plan to replace Julie had to go ahead. Success was the only way to keep their grand scheme on track.

But now, she had run into some unforeseen trouble.

Julie was a prisoner, watched by people sent by Rennes. As she was always around Julie. That made her feel trapped and helpless too.

Stuck in this situation, Nalani couldn't put her plan into action. She desperately needed a way out.

Nalani's heart raced as she heard the soft approaching footsteps.

She knew Rennes was lurking nearby. Suddenly, an idea struck her, and she boldly exclaimed, "Julie, don't be too down. Mr. Hoffman hasn't shown up to rescue you yet, and I doubt he ever will. Mr. Duncan has been quite the gentleman lately. Maybe you should consider..."

Before she could finish, she was cut off by the shocked exclamation.

Julie never expected Nalani coming up with such a bold statement.

She scolded her angrily, "How could you say such a thing? I was wrong about you! Get out now! I don't want to see you!"

Nalani pretended to be upset and dashed away in a hurry. Once she was sure Rennes and Julie weren't watching, a wickedly attractive grin crept onto her face.

She deliberately said those words, trying to gross out Julie.

Nalani needed a good excuse to distance herself from Julie and Rennes without making Rennes think poorly of her.

This was her only shot at executing her plan!

Meanwhile, lots of gamblers strolled onto the gambling ship, and among them was Timothy.

As soon as he set foot on the ship, he received Nalani's message. According to the location mentioned in the message, Timothy tracked her down to a secret room below deck.

When Nalani saw Timothy, relief washed over her, and she couldn't wait to spill the beans about her scheme.

"I've got it all figured out. When the gambling wraps up, Rennes will take the spotlight. That's when your subordinate can discreetly help me deal with Julie's guards. I'll take care of the rest!"

Timothy'd pondered it for what felt like forever. To him, this deal was a no-brainer. He eagerly nodded and declared, "Don't worry. I promised I'd give it my all. Just trust me on this!"

As per the rules of the swanky gambling ship, you could bring along an assistant and a female companion. Timothy's confidence came from the fact that his chosen assistant was none other than Mr. Ghost.

He'd recently become engaged to Adelina, and the Sandoval family was pleased with him. After the engagement, they'd even granted him significant influence.

Timothy had a gut feeling that this voyage in the gambling ship wouldn't be all smooth sailing. That was why he'd gone the extra mile to borrow Mr. Ghost.

He had a fair idea about the kind of person Rennes was. The men guarding Julie weren't likely top-notch members of the Black Spider.

In that case, with Mr. Ghost's skills, discreetly killing those two guards would be a breeze, and there'd be no trace left for the Black Spider to find.
