

Chapter 690 A Promise

The yellow smoke completely dissipated and revealed a smiling Rennes with hands clasped, standing in front of the people who were still alive.

A fake and bitter smile on his face, Rennes said, "Congratulations, everyone! You have now discovered a large rare earth mine!"

Everyone glared at him, furious at his words.

And when the present members of the Sandoval family, Adelina and Timothy, saw that it was Rennes who attacked them, their anger went up a top notch.

Timothy couldn't hold back for one more second. "Rennes, what's all this? Have you forgotten that you are still cooperating with the Sandoval family?"

Instead of cowering in fear like he normally would, Rennes snorted and said, "Don't you worry. I haven't forgotten. However, us cooperating with each other doesn't prevent me from teaching you a lesson. That way, you won't remain so arrogant every single time."

After saying this, Rennes looked at Adelina and said, "Miss Sandoval, if I didn't warn them in advance, you wouldn't be standing here, all safe. But there's nothing forgotten. However, us cooperating with each other doesn't prevent me from teaching you a lesson. That way, you won't remain so arrogant every single time." After saying this, Rennes looked at Adelina and said, "Miss Sandoval, if I didn't warn them in advance, you wouldn't be standing here, all safe. But there's nothing for you to worry about. I won't make things difficult for you. You're free to leave now."

As expected, Adelina didn't say a word. She didn't have the guts to. She had been unruly and wilful. She had offended many people before and didn't give a fuck about it.

This time though, she was really scared.

After all her narrow escapes from death today, she felt like she was on the brink of collapsing.

All she wanted right now was to leave this cursed island as soon as possible and return to the Sandoval family in Invone.

Only in the walls of her home would she feel safe.

So when Rennes said this, Adelina jumped on the opportunity, nodding impatiently. Rennes made way for her as she left the crowd and went out of the valley.

Timothy followed closely after her, thinking he was leaving too. However, Rennes blocked the way right after Adelina.

Timothy frowned at him and raised a confused brow. "What is this, Rennes? You just said you would let us go."

Rennes sneered and clicked his tongue. "Come on, Timothy. You're smarter than this. The Duncan family is in association with the Sandoval family. Now, is your surname Sandoval?"

Timothy's face fell instantly, then started shaking with anger. He pointed at Rennes with a furious forefinger. "You..."

Rennes shot him a sharp glare. "Long ago, I remember saying you are just the son-in-law of the head of the Sandoval family and nothing more. I warned you. I said you can't make decisions for them, yet you ignored my words and caused trouble everywhere. You know what? Let's put the ball in Miss Sandoval's court and see if she's willing to save you."

With a look of pure mockery on his face, Rennes turned his head to look at Adelina who hadn't gotten far.

Adelina had certainly heard them, yet, she didn't so much as turn to look at Timothy. As a matter of fact, her steps got even faster as she disappeared into a corner.

Clearly, her marriage with Timothy meant nothing to her.

Perhaps she once had a good relationship with Timothy, but when the worst came to the worst, she would choose her survival and interests, and abandon everything she had with him.

Timothy watched Adelina slip away in horror. Soon, everything he felt turned into desperation. He gulped and forced himself to say, "Rennes, you don't have to humiliate me! Just tell me what you want to do."

Rennes smirked evilly. Playing with a dagger in his hand, he mused, "Do you remember when you came to Mosaico to see me last time?"

Timothy was confused. What did that have to do with anything? "I remember. What about it?"

With a murderous look in his eyes, Rennes nodded. "I'm glad you remember. Then, you should also remember the promise I made to Julie in front of her bed."

Timothy's heart began to race with fear as he recalled what happened in the ward that day.

No... no! It should have just been a joke.

"I'm a man of my word, Timothy. I promised Julie I

Chapter 690 A Promise

 +90 Points at most was going to kill you, and even if she doesn't love me, I'll do just what I promised." The smile on Rennes' face as he finished was chilling.

 I want no ads >