

Chapter 725 Uninvited Guests

Liam's frown deepened as he waited.

Sergio hadn't come, and Theo was nowhere to be found. Liam had a feeling that something was wrong.

He walked to Riel and whispered in his ear, "It's strange that my grandpa hasn't come out yet. Something is wrong. Go and have a look."

Riel nodded and stood up to go out.

Just as he reached out to open the door, it was pushed open from the outside and a large group of people poured in, leaving him no other choice but to move back.

Everyone in the hall was shocked by this scene. They all stood up and glanced at this group of people, only to find that they were from various clans in Invone, including the Sandoval family.

Adelina let out a strange smile as her eyes surveyed the hall. "What's wrong with you guys? There's no need to be on your guard. We are only here to congratulate Mr. Hoffman on his wedding, not to loot."

All the representatives of the clans that followed Adelina immediately echoed, "We wish Mr. Hoffman a happy marriage and congratulations on marrying a beautiful bride."

Everyone could hear the emphasis they placed on the last two words. They were obviously mocking Julie's appearance.

Liam's face was stone cold at this point. All the uninvited guests were good friends of the Sandoval family, not on the same side with the Hoffman family. Adelina let her gaze fall on Liam and said with a weird smile that promised nothing good, "Mr. Hoffman, you must have been so occupied that it slipped your mind to send us an invitation. But that's fine. We won't hold it against you. You see, we still came with a small congratulatory gift."

Liam's expression didn't change. He knew that Adelina's surprise visit held nothing good. She was looking for an opportunity to cause trouble. He would have dealt with her accordingly, but today being his wedding day, he couldn't let his anger get the better of him.

So, he smiled politely. "Well, since you're here, you should stay and have a meal." Then, he asked the servants to get some more seats.

With a smug smile on her face, Adelina walked ahead and got a seat. Her eyes involuntarily moved to Julie on the stage. As soon as she saw her, her smile turned evil.

She had already found out that it was Liam who destroyed her wedding with Timothy.

That was why she came here today--to repay the favor. Her anger was too much for her to swallow.

All of a sudden, she burst into laughter. "As the wife of the heir to the Hoffman family, how can she look like this? Isn't it ridiculous? I mean, does the Hoffman family not see this as a disgrace?"

Adelina then shook her head in amusement and continued, "I didn't listen to Mr. Hoffman at my wedding and stubbornly married that scumbag Timothy. Now, I really regret my decision. Since you were so kind to me, I have to persuade you to marry someone of equal social rank as you."

Her provocative eyes pierced Liam, as if enticing him some more.

"Miss Sandoval is right. Marrying such an ugly woman is really a shame to the Hoffman family."

The people who came with Adelina supported her and laughed.

Of course, Liam couldn't just sit back and let his beloved be jeered at. He stood in front of them and said coldly, "I'm no longer the heir of the Hoffman family. My marriage has nothing to do with you outsiders. If you came here to look for trouble, you'd better just leave."

That bit of news came as a shock to Adelina. So, Liam was no longer the heir... Interesting.

Her surprise wore off in a second and she said cruelly, "So you would go to the extent of dropping your identity of the heir of the Hoffman family for a woman as ugly as this? Now, Mr. Hoffman, this proves that you are really love-struck."

After a short pause, Adelina shrugged and casually said, "Mr. Hoffman, we didn't come specifically to attend your wedding, but to talk about a cooperation. If you are no longer the heir, I'd like to know who is in charge. Who do I go to with my proposal?"
