Outside the safe house, a lot of guards were in position when suddenly, they faced an attack.

The guards quickly fought back, and the noise of guns filled the air as both sides got into a fierce battle.

Seeing this, the members of the Hoffman family immediately activated the emergency alarm.

The loud alarm echoed in the night sky. It was the highest-level alert only used during huge crises. Inside the secure house, Liam immediately understood the situation.

His deepest worries had become reality.

Julie's delivery had happened so unexpectedly that it couldn't have been foreseen. The precision of the enemy's attack hinted at the presence of a spy within the Hoffman family.

However, the top priority at that moment was ensuring a safe delivery for their child.

The blaring alarm had left Julie uneasy, causing her labor to be seriously affected.

Liam comforted her. "Julie, everything will be fine.

Just concentrate on delivering our baby, and trust me for the rest."

With those words, Liam quickly left the safe house.

The situation outside was incredibly intense.

Despite the Hoffman family amassing strength over the past six months and applying substantial pressure on the other prominent families, the attackers had gathered all their best troops, with strong support from the Duncan family. Consequently, the Hoffman family's defenses were gradually weakening.

In the midst of the turmoil, Rennes charged into the front lines of the battle, his hands already stained with the blood of Hoffman family members.

Liam stood on the rooftop, observing the chaos with a cold and determined expression. But he refrained from taking an impulsive action.

In that moment, he tightly clenched his fists, eager to confront the attackers immediately. However, he wanted to protect the safe house's entrance to prevent any sneak attacks. He would need to wait until Julie safely delivered their child before entering the fray.

Not far from there, Rohan appeared to notice Liam's hesitation and continued to mercilessly kill Hoffman family members.

Sergio who was shielded by several guards was directing the front-line troops and shouted, "Rohan, you monster! Today, I'll settle the score with you and the Duncan family once and for all!"

In response, Rohan, wearing a scornful and ominous grin, remarked, "You? My dear grandpa, last time, I allowed you to live a bit longer, which led to your escape. It appears this time, your life is over."

Rohan exuded confidence at that moment. Even though he wasn't a match for Liam, he held a clear advantage with Liam unable to join the battle. He felt assured about defeating the Hoffman family.

Also, he had one final trick up his sleeve.

Inside the safe house, Julie's anxiety was growing. She exerted herself to the maximum, and beads of sweat dripped from her forehead.

She could feel the turmoil outside and was concerned for the child's safety. She desperately wished to deliver the baby immediately.

Her overwhelming determination provided her with an unprecedented surge of strength.

"Ah!" Julie cried out in pain as she pushed with all her might from her pelvic bones.

"Wah, wah!"

The room was filled with the wailing of a newborn.

The baby had been born.

Julie nearly fainted, but she struggled to catch her breath and calm herself.

A nurse immediately provided her with nourishment, and Julie managed to take a few sips. Once she caught her breath, she anxiously instructed the nurse, "The baby is here. I'm doing okay. Please go and tell Liam!"
