

Chapter 780 Terrifying Talent

Liam gave a nod. Dragon promptly guided him to the assessment site.

Upon entering the area, Liam noticed a familiar face, Laura. Her presence didn't surprise him.

Based on his observation of Laura's performance in the initial test, it seemed likely that she would successfully complete the entire test.

Laura, upon spotting Liam, approached him with a competitive expression, and said, "You might have won the first round, but when it comes to talent, I'll definitely outshine you!"

However, Liam paid little attention to her competitive comment and turned to Dragon, asking, "Can we proceed with the assessment now, sir?"

Dragon nodded and then led them to the gates of two assessment rooms.

With his hands clasped behind his back, he explained to both of them, "This is to primarily assesses your resonance with the primogem. It determines your eligibility to join the War God House and become a warrior who continuously strengthens themselves by absorbing energy from the primogem."

After the explanation, the two assessment rooms each revealed a round and flawless primogem. These stones rose from pedestals on the floor, standing before them.

Dragon offered a faint smile and said, "Both of you, concentrate and connect with the power within the primogems. Absorb the energy in your own way, and the assessment instruments will automatically gauge your resonance. Let's begin."

Laura took a step forward and closed her eyes to focus. The primogem emitted a glow as she tried to establish a connection with it.

This was Liam's first encounter with a primogem, and he was completely amazed. His cells seemed to react with excitement, a sense of affinity with the elemental power of his lineage.

Rather than rushing to connect with the primogem, he took his time to examine it closely.

While he had possessed a stone like this in the past, it had been concealed within him. Today was the first time he could closely examine one.

Liam took a step closer, closed his eyes, and began to establish a connection between his mind and the primogem. In a matter of seconds, he felt a tremendous surge of power.

To him, this power was like a thirsty traveler discovering an oasis.

Almost as if by pure instinct, the primogem's energy effortlessly coursed through his body, gathering around his heart and filling a void he hadn't recognized was there.

During that moment, his blood circulation began to steadily intensify, and the primogem's energy diffused throughout his entire body, enveloping Liam in a deep and blissful sensation of well-being.

Dragon nodded with contentment and then left the place, whispering to himself, "Impressive resonance. It appears the War God House is about to welcome two highly promising individuals."

Suddenly, a hearty laugh echoed from behind him. "Ha! Ha! Indeed! And don't forget whose granddaughter she is!"

Dragon turned around, his demeanor showing respect and a touch of enlightenment. He saluted and greeted, "Mr. Rhodes, it turns out she is your granddaughter. No wonder she is so outstanding!"

An elderly man in modest attire slowly approached. He was an elder of the Salvation Society.

The position of elder was an honorary title given to a former house lord, after their retirement. While they no longer managed day-to-day affairs, their status within the Salvation Society remained exceedingly high.

Sumner Rhodes chuckled. "My granddaughter's achievements will certainly not be beneath mine."

His gaze remained fixed on Laura as she underwent assessment, occasionally displaying a pleased expression.

However, all of a sudden, his attention was drawn to Liam's assessment room. His face revealed a hint of astonishment.

On the display screen of the assessment instrument, real-time updates showed Liam's and Laura's resonances with the primogems.

According to the Salvation Society's standards, achieving a 20% resonance was sufficient for joining the War God House, with a higher resonance indicating greater potential for future development.

Sumner was aware that Laura's resonance was close to 60%, which was impressive within the Salvation Society.

But the level of elemental power within Liam was exceptionally high, and Sumner estimated that his resonance would likely exceed 80%.

Sumner's eyebrows furrowed with surprise, and he asked, "Such incredible potential. Dragon, what family does this young man belong to?"

Dragon, standing behind him, hesitated for a moment and replied in a low tone, "Sir, to be honest, this individual was not a part of Genesis Island. He arrived here unexpectedly, and I've already reported this to the president. When he has the time, he'll come to see him personally."

Upon hearing this, Sumner narrowed his eyes and said, "Impressive indeed. It's rare for such a talent to come from outside. But we must exercise caution and ascertain if he's a spy."

Dragon's eyes gleamed with determination, and he said, "The president has already dispatched someone to investigate. We won't allow any spy to escape!"
