

Chapter 939 Sparring

Trevor quietly walked to the other side, intending to sweep the floor there.

But Delgado was not done with Trevor yet. He followed Trevor and ordered rudely, "Hey, you, put aside your work first! Aren't you supposed to do chores here? I need a sparring partner now, so come here!"

Trevor turned around and stared at Delgado coldly.

He already went away to avoid Delgado. He didn't expect that Delgado would go too far.

Trevor frowned slightly. As he stared at Delgado, his eyes turned cold immediately.

Since he really couldn't escape from Delgado, Delgado shouldn't blame him for being rude this time.

Delgado was so annoying, and he wanted to stop Delgado from harassing him again in the future.

"What are you looking at? Come here!"

Delgado couldn't deny the fact that Trevor's icy gaze frightened him. But he couldn't show it in front of Trevor, so he put on a stern look.

Trevor chuckled. He put down the broom in his hand and followed Delgado to the training ground.

At this time, several disciples were already practicing sparring.

Delgado grabbed a pad and threw it at Trevor. Then he shouted at one disciple, "Arius Jimenez, come here! I found you a new sparring partner. Go start practicing now."

Arius Jimenez was Delgado's cousin. Delgado had already discussed his plan with Arius. During the sparring, Arius would deliberately attack the unprotected parts of Trevor's body, pretending that he missed the target.

Delgado believed that his plan was perfect. In this way, he could surely teach Trevor a lesson.

"All right!" Arius said with a smile while walking over to Delgado.

Delgado winked and gave him a silent hint.

Arius, in his gray training uniform, grinned, showing his teeth. Then he said meaningfully, "Don't worry. Just watch the result of my training."

Delgado was very satisfied with Arius' answer. He stood at the side with arms akimbo and said, "Okay, let's start."

This was what Arius had been waiting for. The moment he heard Delgado's order, he rushed to Trevor, roared, and kicked Trevor's unprotected leg with all his might.

He expected to see a bruise on Trevor's leg after his kick.

But much to his surprise, Trevor just adjusted the pad in his hand and blocked his menacing attack effortlessly.

Arius clicked his tongue, thinking that Trevor was just lucky.

He waved his fist and launched another attack. He didn't want to give Trevor a chance to prepare.

Bang! Bang! Bang!

Arius kept launching attacks from all kinds of tricky angles. But without exception, he was easily blocked by Trevor with the pad.

Arius' repeated attacks didn't work on Trevor. And when he heard the laughter of the other disciples around, he became anxious. He was panting, and his eyes were red. He gathered all his strength and rushed towards Trevor with a roar, wanting to knock Trevor down.

But before he could approach Trevor, Trevor had already moved to the left.

"Ahhh!" Arius failed to hit Trevor and fell to the floor. He lay on the floor, covering his face and crying.

Delgado's eyes were full of annoyance. He looked at Arius angrily and cursed in a low voice, "Loser!"

Then he came up with another idea to make trouble for Trevor again.

"Hey, you! You were supposed to be Arius' sparring partner. Why did you dodge?"

Trevor sneered and retorted, "It's because I would dodge that the training is meaningful. Do you think the enemy in an actual battle will just stand still and get beaten?"

Delgado was so angry that he felt like he was about to lose his mind. He gritted his teeth and challenged Trevor, "If you think you're right, I'll spar with you in person."
