

Chapter 1613 I Sold Her To Brothels

Audrey's sharp and piercing laughter echoed around the cemetery, and her face was contorted into a terrifying grimace.

Brandon watched Audrey struggle and felt disgusted as her face resembled her mother's, albeit distorted and far more repugnant.

"Tell me where the real Audrey is. Otherwise, I'll bury you here alive," he said coldly.

Audrey's piercing laughter came to an abrupt halt. Glaring at Brandon resentfully, she retorted, "Why would someone as heartless as you even care about a cousin you've never met?"

Brandon pursed his lips and replied emotionlessly, "Regardless, she is still my relative. Since I've come this far, I don't see why I shouldn't help her out. If you don't start talking, I'll bury you and let you suffocate in the soil!"

Audrey burst into laughter as if she had heard a joke. "Why can't you take me as your cousin? After all, I look exactly like her. Why can't I be her? Why can't she be me?" she asked, her tone full of hatred.

Brandon narrowed his gaze and said impatiently,

"You better not test my patience."

His eyes were sharp, and Audrey could tell he wasn't lying. Her heart quivered, and her laughter died away abruptly.

However, she soon realized that her only future was death, and her confidence resurfaced. She smiled sinisterly and replied, "I sold the real Audrey to the brothels. If you want to find her, you can start there! She might still be fine if you ask your men to hurry!"

Brandon's expression became completely cold as he watched Audrey turn maniacal. "Very well, you think you have nothing to fear now, huh?" he asked disdainfully.

"It doesn't matter. What do I have left to fear? You're going to kill me anyway," she grumbled.

Suddenly, Audrey went crazy and taunted, "Kill me! Come on, do it! Come on!"

Suddenly, Brandon let out a devilish smile and said, "Who said I was going to kill you?"

Audrey's expression froze, and a glimmer of hope flickered in her eyes. "Brandon, are you going to spare me? I've told you everything. You will have mercy on me, right? You will spare me, right?" she asked hopefully.

"Spare you...?" Brandon said, pretending to be thoughtful. His lips curved slightly, and he ordered his guards, "Dig her out."

Audrey beamed and hastily pleaded for Brandon's forgiveness, "Brandon, I know my mistake. No, I should call you Mr. Larson. I won't repeat the same mistake again. In fact, I won't even appear in front of you again. Please spare me, I beg you!"

Brandon turned away and walked briskly towards the exit. Before he left, he gave his final merciless order. "Dig her out but keep her hands and feet in. This way, she can't harm anyone else."

"Roger that!" the bodyguards responded in unison, and they approached Audrey with their shovels.

Before long, the quiet graveyard was filled with a woman's piercing screams. Her screams echoed throughout the graveyard, sending people unsettling chills down their spine when they heard her voice.

Meanwhile, Brandon was in his car, leaning against the window. He appeared unmoved by the chilly cries as he took out his phone and called his subordinates to find the whereabouts of the real Audrey with the information he had gotten.

Meanwhile, at Brandon's villa's guest room, the morning sun filtered through the curtains, casting its light upon Janet's beautiful face. Slowly, she opened her eyes, and memories of her fainting last night came rushing back to her.

Recalling Audrey's offer, Janet immediately jolted awake.

Immediately pushing her blanket aside, she leaped out of bed and realized she was completely nude. Her only clothing seemed to be Brandon's coat, which was draped over her.

Janet hastily searched for something to wear before opening the door and hurrying outside. The guard stationed at the door tried to stop her. "Mrs. Larson, is something wrong?" he asked as he bowed respectfully.

"Where are Brandon and Audrey?" Janet questioned anxiously.

Seeing how distressed Janet was, the guard quickly answered, "After you fainted in the guest room last night, Mr. Larson suddenly barged in and called the family doctor to examine your condition. After confirming that you were fine, he took Audrey and left. They have yet to return."