

Chapter 1641 Want To Be A Mother

Hearing what Janet said, Laney immediately sensed that something was amiss. She discreetly ushered Janet out of the child's room and inquired, "Why are you asking me so many questions about childbirth?"

Laney paused for a moment, her brow furrowing in concern. "Can losing one's memory change a person's character?"

Janet realized that Laney had likely guessed she was preparing for pregnancy. She offered a wry smile. "My memory has returned, but there are some aspects of the past that remain hazy."

"Is something troubling you? The old Janet wasn't like this." Laney's confusion deepened as she pondered the situation.

Janet smiled, then after a brief pause, she decided to confide in Laney. "Well, here's the thing. Brandon and I are planning to have our own child."

"That's wonderful news! Your child will undoubtedly inherit all your beauty and intelligence," Laney exclaimed, holding Janet excitedly. "Time does fly. I didn't expect you'd want to become a mother."

"It's still early. I've just been thinking about it. Please, don't mention it to anyone else for now," Janet cautioned Laney. She didn't want to deal with the barrage of questions and well-meaning advice just yet.

Laney often reminisced about the times when she had protected Janet, and now she was excited to see her friend embark on the journey of motherhood.

Seeing the expectant look on Janet's face, Laney reminded, "If you're planning to have a baby, it's essential to ensure your health. You must have taken a lot of medication when you lost your memory."

Janet told Laney, "My mother has found a skilled doctor to oversee my medication. Don't worry. Everything is well taken care of."

Laney was reassured to hear that Johanna had made sure everything was arranged correctly for Janet.

"That's great. It sounds like everything has been carefully planned for you." However, as she spoke, Laney couldn't help but reminisce the hardships she endured after her pregnancy.

As Laney thought about it, her mood grew heavy.

"Is something bothering you, Laney? You don't look well." Observing Laney's change in demeanor, Janet quickly noticed something was amiss.

Laney wore a solemn expression as she broached the topic. "Are you absolutely sure about your decision? Bringing a child into the world may not be as straightforward as you imagine."

Janet nodded with unwavering determination. Even though she had no recollection of her past, she was certain about her love for Brandon and her desire to have their child. "I'm completely sure. I want to have a child with Brandon."

Observing Janet's resolve, Laney's smile grew more genuine, although a touch of bitterness remained. "That's wonderful. Your relationship with Brandon is quite different from mine with Garrett. He will surely protect you."

"Please don't speak so despondently, Laney. I want you to be happy. Have you been struggling lately?" Janet was concerned about Laney.

Laney shook her head, her gaze fixed on the view outside the window. After a brief moment, she offered an encouraging smile to Janet. "If you're planning to become pregnant, make thorough preparations. Having your own child is truly a joyful experience."

"I understand. Thank you for everything you've done," Janet told Laney as she held her hand, a desire to comfort her evident in her eyes.

However, she found herself at a loss for words, and she let a moment of silence pass between them.

Just then, a commotion from outside the room caught their attention.

Laney swiftly moved to the door and asked, "Who's there?"

It turned out to be Garrett, who had just returned, holding shopping bags. He beamed at Laney and said, "It's your husband. Take a look at what I've brought. I got your favorite food."

Janet was about to speak up in Garrett's favor
