

The Princess and the Pauper (Arabella)

Chapter 872

Chapter 872

"I want to fire a couple of the staff."

"Which two pests have managed to upset you?" Louisa, sensing Arabella's ill temper, immediately shared her lividity.

"Debby and Daisy,' Arabella stated their names without hesitation.

"Did they dare to disrespect you? If so, I won't let them off the hook so easily!"

Debby and Daisy, overhearing the conversation, felt a chill run down their spines.

"Not exactly disrespect, just a propensity for insolence, and they tend to bully the others."

"That's outrageous! I pay them a few thousand dollars a month, not to act high and mighty, disrupting the harmony of my household!

Those two numbskulls won't last long in this line of work!"

Angry voices echoed from the phone, along with the sound of Louisa rummaging around her room, "Huh, where did my slippers go?"

It seemed she was about to storm downstairs, likely to confront Debby and Daisy.

The girls panicked, instinctively wanting to flee, but they were blocked by Gloria and Doris.

"Mom, don't worry, I can handle this." Arabella eyed Gloria and Doris calmly, "Since you have no objections, I'll proceed with the dismissal."

"Absolutely, fire them! I'll have a word with them later!" Louisa couldn't find her slippers and muttered to herself, "Bella, remember, you're the apple of your father's and my eye. In this house, you always have the right to fire anyone!"

Arabella hung up the phone and turned to Debby and Daisy, "Did you hear that?"

"We're sorry, Ms. Bella, it was all Martha."

Debby's words were cut off as Martha gave her a harsh twist of the arm, "What nonsense are you spouting?"

"Nothing, I didn't say anything." Debby hung her head.

"Apologize." Arabella didn't care who started the trouble, and they were all in it together.

Debby and Daisy hastily apologized to her and to Edith, Gloria, and Doris as well.

"We don't need our salaries for this month, and we'll give it to Gloria and Doris. Please, Ms. Bella, plead with Madam not to blacklist us in this industry."

"We'll change, really. Ms. Bella!"

Arabella pulled her hand away coldly, then turned to Martha, who had no choice but to bow her head and apologize to Arabella, Edith, Gloria, and Doris due to the surveillance.

"Let's dock Martha's salary for this month as well since she's implicated," Arabella said with a slight smile.

"Ms. Bella, your punishment is fair.' Martha had to swallow her pride for the sake of her future.

Arabella then turned to Serena, "Keep your people in check from now on."

Serena was furious but helpless. She had overheard her mother's words on the phone.

Her mother had said Arabella was her precious daughter!

Arabella always has the right to fire anyone in this house!

At that moment, Louisa came downstairs in her slippers. Seeing both her daughters, she couldn't help but ask, "Where are Debby and Daisy?"

"They've just gone to pack their things,' Arabella replied calmly.

"Are you alright?" Louisa touched Arabella's head, showing her concern, "They didn't lay a hand on you, did they?"

Arabella couldn't help but smile at the thought of those two trying to hit her.

"No.' Arabella chuckled.