

The Princess and the Pauper (Arabella)

Chaper 976

Chapter 976

Louisa paused and added, "Serena, I understand that Bella's return to our family might make you feel a bit put off, but Bella is our flesh and blood. She needed to be here. I hope that you two can get along, because you both mean so much to me"

Serena was puzzled by her mother's sudden statement.

"Bella had a tough time with the Murphy family in the past, and now that Clark is willing to take her on a trip abroad, don't let it bother you. Your brothers took you out a lot when you were younger."

So that was it!

Serena sighed with relief and laughed, "Mom, why would I be upset? I'm not petty. Bella is so amazing. Not only do the other brothers like her, but I do too. Don't worry, and we'll get along better than real sisters. No matter how long she spends with the brothers, I won't let it bother me. Seeing our family so harmonious makes me happy. Why would I be upset?"

To dispel Louisa's concerns, Serena added, "If sis doesn't like me, I can get married and move out sooner."

She stuck her tongue out at Louisa playfully, making her mother laugh, "You silly girl!"

Louisa had felt that Serena was somewhat unhappy about Clark taking Bella out these past few days, but it seemed she was overthinking.

Serena was perfectly fine with it, and it was Louisa who was being overly concerned.

Meanwhile.

The plane landed at Mystic Oak House, Clark's private residence. The lawn alone was several acres, giving it a grand appearance.

Dennis received the coordinates and had been waiting. When he saw Clark carrying Carol down the stairs of the plane, he hurried over.

"I'll take her" Dennis extended his arms.

But Clark did not hand Carol over, "She's injured. I don't want to jostle her. I can carry her."

Knowing that Diana had been worried about this guy until her last moment, Dennis held back his words. He then noticed Romeo carrying Arabella off the plane, and seeing her injuries, he couldn't help but ask, "Are you okay?"

"Those were Chester's doing."

Arabella wanted to say that those guys weren't even human, so getting hurt was unavoidable.

But when Dennis heard this, he felt a pang of guilt, "I heard from Diana that those people were injected with all kinds of strange substances from a young age, making them superhuman. Are your injuries serious? I'm sorry for dragging you into this."

He had thought that place was safe.

He didn't expect Mount Doom's people to find them so quickly.

He had planned to return home after filming some videos, not expecting those people to strike when they were vulnerable.

"It's fine. Carol and I just have some flesh wounds, and we'll be fine in a few days." Arabella dismissed his concerns.

But Dennis seriously noted this favor and promised solemnly, "Arabella, I owe you my life."

He earnestly pledged, "If you ever need my help in the future, just say the word. Even if it means risking my life, I will do it without hesitation"

"You once saved me." Arabella emphasized, "So, we're even."

"But you saved Diana twice, once when you carried her back to the castle and once when you assured her you could cure her poison."

Arabella found it amusing. She hadn't even started the cure yet, and he was already thanking her.

"If we have to keep score like this, then we're not friends." Arabella said and glanced at Clark, "Let's go inside."