

Arabella 1532

Chapter 1532

"Ah, who are you? What the hell!" Serena screamed, her voice sharp with shock. She couldn't believe that, for the second time in a month, she found herself being bagged and beaten to a pulp.

The assailants didn't utter a word in response. Instead, they doubled their efforts, raining down blows on her with a ferocity that seemed to multiply with each hit. Through the thick fabric of the sack, Serena could sense at least seven or eight people surrounding her.

"I'm Serena Collins, the Collins family heiress! This is right outside Reflections Villa."

She thought dropping her prestigious family name would deter them, but their punches only grew more ruthless.

Instinctively, Serena curled up, trying to protect her head, but kicks landed hard against her sides. The pain was so severe that she started to see stars and nearly passed out.

"Who sent you? How much are they paying you? I'll double it, triple it, hell—I'll pay ten times, twenty times more."

The group seemed to sneer at her offer, their fists and feet not showing the slightest sign of mercy.

Serena could do nothing but curl into a tighter ball.

It felt like her shoulders were being trampled into the ground, her limbs almost snapped from the force of the stomping, and her front and back bruised from countless kicks. This feeling of helplessness and fear was all too familiar, a nightmarish echo of the last time she was beaten by her aunt.

in agony, "What but intensified the beating instead, as if they intended on

I beg of you." Serena couldn't help but plead, "Just stop, body. Serena was on the slithered up her neck, accompanied by ripped the sack from her head to find herself covered flailed wildly, but her wrist was promptly bitten several

"Ah."

Serena bolted

had vanished, leaving only the hissing snakes help me." Serena's terrified cries for help echoed into the guards at Reflections was on her way home when she saw Romeo press the answer button on caller's voice resonated through the

She's still alive, but she didn't get off

"Got it."

Romeo ended the call just in time to hear Arabella ask, "You had her beaten up?"

That "her" clearly referred to Serena.

The only woman Romeo seemed to despise this much was, indeed, Serena.

With a dispassionate tone, Romeo replied, "She needs to learn her lesson.."

If it weren't for the fact that she was Kenneth and Louisa's daughter, Romeo would make her life a living hell.

A sly smile played on Arabella's lips. She had planned to settle the score with Serena herself and give her a taste of her own medicine by beating her to the punch. But it seemed Romeo had taken action first.

That was probably for the best. Romeo's guys wouldn't pull punches, and in the end, they had saved her the trouble.

"This doesn't concern you," said Romeo as he pulled up to the entrance of Reflections Villa and opened the car door for her, his voice softening, "And they won't trace it back to us."