

Arabella 1572

Chapter 1572

"Thanks a bunch, David."

"Cheers for the wedding gift!"

"Thanks for giving us such a unique and grand celebration."

A stream of newlyweds thanked David, who then suggested that everyone on stage join the audience for a massive group photo.

Arabella and Romeo also received two tickets, and whether by chance or design, their seats were right in the center, front row – the best in the house, mirroring their seats at today's ceremony.

As the crowd erupted in hearty applause, the photo session wrapped up, and couples hand in hand strolled off the stage, David started belting out his fourth and fifth tunes.

A new celebrity made their entrance, and the crowd was electrified once again.

Arabella glanced at the ring on her finger and leaned in to whisper to Romeo, "When did you plan this?"

"A week ago." Romeo had to lean close to her ear to be heard over the noise, "There's an inscription on the back."

Arabella didn't catch

"You didn't say you love me."

With a smile, Arabella looked at him, "I love you."

"Can't hear you. Say it again." Romeo playfully insisted.

"If you can't hear, too bad."

"You just said you love me, don't think of backing out. You can't say those words to anyone else in this lifetime."

Alma, sitting behind them, was practically drowning in the sweetness. She had never imagined the Romeo she knew could be so clingy, so good at sweet talk.

No woman could resist that.

Arabella's reaction was too cool for her. If it were Alma, she would have kissed him back without hesitation.

The business tycoons to Romeo's left were speechless, their eyes almost popping out, mouths agape. Despite the noise, they hadn't heard the sweet nothings between Romeo and Arabella, but seeing Romeo whispering and kissing Arabella now and then, and the way their fingers were locked the whole time – as if holding onto a rare treasure – was enough to astonish them.
