

Arabella 1609

Chapter 1609

Serena went out to the balcony, a pair of telescope in hand, to spy on the bustle at the main house.

Right on cue, a group of people arrived dressed in formal attire, radiating a familiar professional vibe. They were probably the designers who used to come for measurements in previous years.

Disappointingly, Kenneth and Louisa had invited those designers again this year. What irked her was that not one of them headed towards her building—it was as if they had completely forgotten about her, the once-celebrated darling.

The thought of them fitting Arabella for a dress, designing her New Year's outfit, and pairing it with stunning jewelry. Serena felt a tumult of resentment rising within her.

She used to be the envy of all, outshining everyone with her grace.

This year, it seemed Arabella would overshadow her.

With these thoughts, her discomfort only deepened!

Comforted by Martha's logic, she thought, "Maybe if I buy my own clothes, my parents might even feel a bit guilty for neglecting me, for favoring Arabella. If she has something and I don't.]"

With that in mind, Serena decided that if Kenneth and Louisa hadn't arranged for the designers to come to her, she would reach out to the brand suppliers herself and buy the clothes with her own money.

No matter what, she couldn't let Arabella outdo her!

She wanted everyone to know that she, the adopted daughter, was in no way inferior to their biological daughter!

In the spotlight, she would be the one to shine the brightest!

[Oh, by the way, Martha, did you see the news online? One moment people were bashing Arabella, the next they were all supporting her. I created a few fake accounts and ended up being scolded by them.]
Serena mentioned, still feeling a bit wronged.

Martha quickly advised, [That old dame Kiki stepped in, so you better delete your comments right now. You can't afford to stir up trouble at this critical time. If your parents find out you were trash-talking their biological daughter with fake accounts, you might find yourself all alone on New Year. Don't even dream of setting foot back in the main house.]
