

Never Say 439

When they arrived at the hospital, they were quickly directed to the floor where elder Mr. White was staying.

After verifying their names on the visitor list, a nurse guided them down the corridor.

Given that this floor was reserved for the White family, the hallway was eerily quiet.

Stopping in front of a door, the nurse knocked gently.

“Mr. White, you have visitors.”

As the door swung open, Hannah locked eyes with her long-lost older cousins. The sight of her sick grandfather left her struggling to contain her emotions.

Jalen White, seeing his cousin, appeared surprised, as if he had not anticipated her presence.

Just as he started to rise, a voice from beside him preemptively commanded the nurse to exit.

Christy, Jalen’s wife, sneered at Hannah, lacking any semblance of politeness.

“So you show up now, just when Jalen is taking control?”

Are you here to stake a claim on the inheritance?”

Angela’s Library

Christy was a woman who spoke her mind, often bluntly, even harshly at times.

Jalen emerged from the hospital room, cutting Christy off.

“Shut up!”

“What’s your point?” Wyatt interjected, visibly annoyed.

“She’s a granddaughter of the White family, isn’t she? What right do you have, as her cousin-in-law, to say anything?”

Christy crossed her arms and huffed, “That’s none of your concern!”

The White family have done plenty for the Moore family over the years, haven’t they?”

Hannah wanted to speak, but Wyatt cut her off.

“Forget about favors. Now that Hannah’s back, when will you give her the shares her mother left her?”

Jalen’s eyes dimmed upon hearing Hannah’s reasons for returning were tied to family assets.

Christy wasn’t willing to back down.

“Please! She’s been absent all these years, not even visiting her own grandfather. And now she wants shares and property? What a disgrace!”

Hannah overheard the heated exchanges and insults.

