

Chapter 1652 Get In The Car

Janet realized Brandon was the one ordering the bodyguards to obstruct her path.

Frustration boiling over, she rolled down the car window for a clearer view.

Brandon's bodyguards had blocked the narrow mountain road, and the twists and turns obscured her view of what lay ahead.

Straining her ears, she caught faint sounds, heightening her fear that Brandon might already be confronting Jeremy.

Driven by worry, she flung open the car door and stepped out.

"Let me through," Janet demanded, her eyes flashing with anger at the bodyguards barring her way.

"I'm sorry, but Mr. Larson has ordered us not to let you pass. Please understand our position," one of them replied in a respectful tone.

At that moment, Janet's own bodyguards, dispatched by the White family, quickly surrounded her.

"Miss, what's our next move?" the chief bodyguard inquired.

Janet, maintaining her composure, checked the GPS on her phone.

She noted they were only about a kilometer from Brandon, despite being halted by his men.

Glancing at her practical flat shoes, she decisively instructed her bodyguards, "We'll walk from here."

After confirming the route on her GPS, she began jogging in the indicated direction.

Larson Group's bodyguards, realizing her intent to proceed on foot, were torn between their duty to Brandon and the thought of Janet's challenging journey.

After a brief internal debate, the lead bodyguard approached Janet with a mix of respect and apprehension.

"Madam, please return to your car," the bodyguard implored with due respect.

Janet was momentarily puzzled by his request.

Larson Group's bodyguards, loyal to Brandon for years, understood Janet's significance to him.

Choosing to defy Brandon's directive might cost them a bonus, but if harm befell Janet under their watch, a harsher punishment awaited them.

Weighing their options, they opted to assist her.

"Please, get in the car. We'll take you there," the head bodyguard offered.

"Thank you," Janet responded, her voice laced with gratitude. She quickly climbed back into the car, urgency written on her face. "Drive faster."

The White family's bodyguards, grasping Larson Group's bodyguards' intentions, hurried back to their vehicles to follow.

Janet's heart raced as she pressed the driver for more speed.

"Faster! Even faster!"

The car responded to her commands, its tires screeching eerily as it navigated the sharp bend. The driver's skill was evident, the car seeming to float around the corner against the forces of gravity.

They sped towards the GPS coordinates, arriving near Brandon's location. But they were too late. Janet's eyes widened at what she saw.

Chapter 1652 Get In The Car

 +120 Points at most

One look was all it took for Janet to identify the driver of the white car as Jeremy.

In a dramatic chase, Jeremy's car crashed into Brandon's with devastating impact.

Our ads aim to provide better support for authors.

