After a brief pause, Jonah lowered his voice and cautioned, "You know, Jameson Schmidt is even more calculating than we initially thought. What we've uncovered so far is just the tip of the iceberg.

Consider this: he returned from Kontina after a 15-year absence and suddenly became close to you. You're a Taylor, and we're entrusting KS Group to you.

"You're a princess, a queen. If you were more high-profile, you would have been the most eligible bachelorette in Cyrris.

"I can't shake the feeling that Jameson might have ulterior motives-I don't trust him."

He furrowed his brow and continued, "I know this might sound harsh, but, to me, Jameson is even worse than Jasper."

"Jonah!" Alyssa exclaimed, gripping her cup tightly as her heart raced.

Jonah remarked, "At least Jasper is honest with the woman he loves."

Alyssa tightened her grip, her eyes welling up with tears. She retorted, "You're right. He was so devoted to Liana Gardner that he enlisted in the military and went to war after she broke up with him!"

"But isn't it true that he risked his life for you? He's still dealing with the repercussions of those old injuries. I'm concerned there might be long-term effects."

Alyssa grew more and more anxious. Her eyes darkened. She refuted, "That's a different thing altogether."

"Lyse, you weren't blind when you fell for him. He was brutally honest about the fact that he didn't love you," Jonah explained with a sigh.

He leaned forward and grasped her cold hand. "At the very least, Jasper has never lied to you. I don't care about other flaws, but your partner shouldn't be dishonest with you."

Her eyes wavered, and she hung her head silently.

After bidding farewell to the Taylors, Alyssa and Sean returned to Solana City. As they neared the freeway, Alyssa suddenly suggested, "Let's make a detour to Seaview Manor."

Sean wore a slight frown but, agreed. "Sure."

Upon their arrival at the manor, Alyssa decided to call Rosie instead of Jasper.

Rosie answered with concern, "Madam, I won't lie to you. Mr. Beckett hasn't been home for a few days.

I've tried calling him, but he seldom picks up. He sounds weak yet insists everything is fine when I ask.

Alyssa's chest tightened as if something had clamped down on it.

Rosie went on, "I knew him well because I raised him. He's the type who doesn't like to worry others. He always keeps to himself when he's sick or in trouble, and he refuses to tell me, no matter how many times *Madam, can you get in touch with him? I'm so worried for him!" Rosie sounded like she was about to cry.

I ask.

"Mrs. Rosie, don't panic. I'll find him," Alyssa gently comforted her. Even if Jasper refused to meet everyone, she believed he would never turn her down.

Following the call, Alyssa pondered and decided to contact Xavier. She began, "Hello, Mr. Hall."

“M-Ms. Alyssa! Good evening. Xavier replied with a hint of panic in his voice, a stark contrast from his usual warm demeanor. She was sure that he had something to hide.

“Where’s Mr. Beckett? He’s not at home, so where did he go?” Alyssa impatiently interrogated Xavier with a frown.

“M-Mr. Beckett is on a business trip,” Xavier explained.

“Xavier Hall, if you lie to me, there will be consequences,” Alyssa warned him in an intimidating tone.

“Madam, I’ll tell you everything, even if Mr. Beckett fires me for it,” Xavier finally confessed with a teary voice.

“Please check on him now. He’s in a poor state. I fear something terrible might happen to him!”

Meanwhile, Jasper was recuperating at a private villa in a nearby suburb.

On that particular day, he had taken the medication, marking the conclusion of his first round of treatment. He was aware that Alyssa’s employees would deliver the medication for the second round later on.

He believed Alyssa was only repaying him for his help, not doing it out of genuine affection for him.

Throughout the day, he had experienced mild chest pains. To his surprise, a high fever struck him during the night.

“Xavier? Xavier?” he croaked, his throat parched and sore, as he struggled to keep his eyes open.

After a while, he remembered that he had sent Xavier on an errand to pick up some important documents from Beckett Group. Xavier was probably on the way right now.

He managed to rise from the bed, only to discover that his sheets were soaked in sweat. His hair clung to his forehead, and his entire body was drenched, as if he had fallen into a pool.

Changing into fresh pajamas, he went downstairs to get some water. The doorbell rang just then.

Puzzled, he approached the intercom and turned on the video feed. When Alyssa’s radiant face appeared on the screen, his eyes brightened with excitement as his heart raced.

“Jasper Beckett, I know you’re in there. Open the door,” she demanded, her gaze unwavering as she stared into the camera.

He remained silent, his lips pressed together.

Her anger flaring, she threatened, “Are you faking your death, or are you truly dead? Open the door now! If you want to draft a will, go ahead. If you don’t have one, I’ll come in and take care of your affairs.”

Jasper coughed, taken aback by her words.

Growing concerned, Alyssa began banging on the door, saying, “I see through your little game. If you Alyssa’s heart skipped a beat as she saw Jasper, who had visibly lost weight and appeared sickly.

Hadn’t he been taking his medication on time? He had seemed fine not too long ago, so how had his condition deteriorated so quickly?

She bit her lower lip and went in. He tried to pull himself together as he led her to the living room.

He inquired, “What brings you here? Did Xavier tell you my address?”

“Don’t blame him. He did it for your own good,” Alyssa replied. She took a seat on the couch and fixed at penetrating gaze on him.

In a chilly tone, she continued, “You don’t have trustworthy people around you. It would be unwise to let go of Xavier.

“Besides, there’s no point working for a loser like you. If you fire him, I’ll hire Xavier to work at KS Group.

You'd better not cry over losing him."

"You're overthinking it, Ms. Alyssa," Jasper said, locking eyes with her.

Because of that, he dared not vocalize his thoughts.-

"Wow, you keep calling me Ms. Alyssa. Why did you stop calling me 'Lyse'?" she wondered with an

"I know you hated it when I called you 'Lyse'," he replied.

Her eyes widened. For some inexplicable reason, she felt a pang of sadness and pain.

"I was wrong for forcing you against your will. I won't make you do anything that makes you uncomfortable," Jasper announced.

His pale complexion was strangely captivating, leaving Alyssa momentarily entranced..

Clearing her throat, she placed the medication on the table and rose. "These are the medications for your second round of treatment. Take them on time. I'm leaving."

Jasper shook his head and insisted, "No, please take them with you."

Frowning, she admonished him, "What are you thinking? Do you want to risk your life? You're a rising star in the business world with a substantial net worth. Are you seriously throwing it all away?"

"No. I just feel like you shouldn't be indebted to me. I might have saved your life, but I did that because I was making up to you," he explained, shaking his head once more.

He added, "You don't have to feel sorry for me, no matter how bad my state is. Besides, I'm much better

His words left her conflicted. She retorted, "Well, if that's the case, then I have nothing more to say. If you won't accept my help, I won't force my kindness on you. That would be shameless.

“After you complete your first round of treatment, you can discontinue the routine. All medicine comes with some level of side effects. It’s not good to take them regularly anyway. Good luck.”

With that, she planned to leave, but he stopped her. He said, “It’s not often that you visit. Since it’s chilly

Alyssa felt Jasper’s hot and heavy breath on her neck, like flames licking her skin, leaving it tinged red.

“Jasper, are you out of your mind? What’s all this nonsense? Jasper!” she exclaimed.

Jasper’s thin pajamas were soaked with sweat, and it seeped into Alyssa’s shirt as well.

He teetered between consciousness and a haze of excruciating pain, his body aching. The only thought in his mind was holding onto the woman he loved, despite how pathetic and shameless it made him appear.

“Lyse, please don’t leave me... Don’t hate me... Jasper buried his damp face in her neck and spoke in tears. It was heart-wrenching to hear.

Alyssa could feel the warmth on her shoulders. It was impossible to tell if it was sweat or tears. A profound bitterness suddenly washed over her, gripping her very soul.

She thought, “Oh, Jasper, you’ve never been so small in front of me.”

When she had cried and begged him not to divorce her, he had callously tossed the divorce papers in front of her, forcing her to end the relationship. He had been so haughty and stoic back then.

She bit her lip with teary eyes at his pathetic look. “Jasper, you must be out of your mind. What nonsense is this?”

“It’s not nonsense. It’s my true feelings...” he argued, stubbornly shaking his head. Drops of tears or sweat trickled down his face.

“Lyse, I love you...”

Her eyes quivered, and her neck stiffened. Despite her cool demeanor, she blushed hard.

With the last ounce of his strength, Jasper looked up and tried to caress the face he had longed for day and night.

His eyes glimmered, touching her heart. He rambled on, "Alyssa, I know what I'm talking about. I said I love you... Only you..."

Then, he lost consciousness and slumped against her.

"Ugh, you fool! Why did you have to pass out here? You're so heavy!" she exclaimed with wide eyes, Landon asked worriedly, "Mr. Hall, how is your boss holding up?"

Xavier answered, "Mr. Beckett coughed up blood twice, and he's running a high fever."

The memory of Jasper's suffering the previous night weighed heavily on Xavier's mind. He wished he could bear that pain on Jasper's behalf.

Landon's frustration flared, and he clenched his fists. "How did things get this fucking bad? Fuck!"

Moving a nearly six-foot-tall man to the bedroom proved to be a huge challenge. Thankfully, the villa was equipped with an elevator.

Alyssa managed to drag Jasper to the bedroom, feeling as though she was lugging a lifeless body.

Upon settling him in bed, she realized that their sweat had mingled, leaving her shirt soaked.

“You’re incredibly heavy! Count yourself lucky that I didn’t have to dismember you.” Alyssa panted.

Then, she hurried to the bathroom to retrieve a wet towel. She gently applied it to Jasper’s skin to alleviate his fever.

Exhausted, she slumped beside the bed and complained, “I’m so speechless. Why did you push yourself so hard when you’re already sick? You’re a handful.”

She shot the unconscious man an irritated look. Despite her harsh remarks, a sense of guilt gnawed at her, knowing she was partially responsible for his illness.

“Lyse...” Jasper mumbled with his eyes closed. His lashes fluttered as he unknowingly professed his love for her in his dreams.

“That’s enough. Are you trying to cast a spell on me? I’m right here,” she grumbled to herself.

“If I had known I would be dealing with this mess, I would have sent Sean instead. I didn’t sign up for this.

Just rest and stay still.”

Then, she tried to get up and look for some Ibuprofen in the villa.

Suddenly, Jasper’s bloodshot eyes popped open, and he seized her wrist.

Her expression crumbled as she struggled to free herself. She questioned, “When did you wake up? Or were you conscious the whole time? You’re lying to me, aren’t you?”

“I’ve never lied to you…” he rasped between labored breaths. Anxious that she might escape, he clung to I’ve done everything I can, but it wouldn’t be appropriate for me to stay with you after our divorce. Mr.

As she leaned forward to get up, Jasper tugged at her wrist, causing her to tumble into his warm embrace. She gasped, “Jasp

Fearing that he might crush her with his weight, he braced himself with his arms on the bed. The contours

“I thought you promised not to force me against my will,” she said aloud, feeling herself blush. An electrifying feeling coursed through her.

A bead of hot sweat landed on her cheek, stirring her heart. She continued accusing him, “I can’t trust a word from you! You’ve gone back on your word right away!”

“It’s your fault for visiting me at the wrong time,’ he replied, enveloping her with the warmth of his body.

He stared deep into her soul, captivated by her beauty. “Ms. Alyssa, you’re toying with the life of a sick man.”

She blushed and attempted to retort angrily, but he didn’t give her the chance.

Pinching Alyssa’s chin between his fingers, Jasper leaned forward and kissed her aggressively. His tongue forced its way into her mouth and passionately tangoed with hers.

Landon and Xavier were trapped in a seemingly endless wait on the first floor. Xavier paced nervously, casting occasional glances of the second floor.

Meanwhile, Landon sat on the couch with a grim expression and stared down at the surveillance footage that played on his phone. He replayed the scene where Zoe had bullied Lauren a couple of times. His anger grew with each replay.

“Mr. Harper, what are you watching? You look serious,” Xavier wondered and went up to Landon.

Landon shot him a death glare and waved him away, saying, “Go away. I don’t air my dirty laundry.”

Stunned by Landon’s anger, Xavier retreated right away. Landon went back to watching the footage.

His heart ached at Lauren’s reflex reaction-she had curled up into a ball and wrapped her arms around her head when Zoe had approached her.

Wait a minute! He furrowed his brows and examined Lauren’s response. Why did she exhibit symptoms of PTSD? Could she have been a victim of abuse at home?

Could her response to Zoe be rooted in her trauma from Betty’s abuse? Was that the reason?

“What intimate time?” she exclaimed and glared at him, feeling the urge to wipe that grin from his face by hitting him with her heels.

Landon crossed his legs and turned around, resting his chin in his palm. He studied her keenly and raised an amused brow at her moist lips and blushing cheeks.

He thought, “Oh Jasper, you must have gotten some action. You’re just a horny, shameless man beneath that stoic exterior!”

“Madam, you’re finally here! There’s hope for Mr. Beckett!” Xavier exclaimed and stared at Alyssa with

She didn’t bother to correct how Xavier had addressed her. Instead, she told him sternly, “Mr. Hall, the relapse of internal injuries is the reason behind Mr. Beckett’s fever. We must take it seriously.

“I’ve just contacted a hospital under KS Group known for high patient confidentiality and arranged for a head physician to attend to him. Why don’t you and Landon prepare to send him there right now?”

Xavier nodded with gratitude. “Thank you, Madam! I knew you cared about Mr. Beckett. You wouldn’t leave him to his fate.”

“I won’t watch him die, but that doesn’t mean I have feelings for him. Stop making things up,” she stubbornly rebuffed Xavier.

Then, she walked down the stairs and approached Landon. When they exchanged glances, he felt a weird Alyssa left the villa and entered Landon's luxury car.

Landon quipped, "Lyse, it's rare that you're willing to spend time with me."

His eyes were always seductive. He watched the beautiful Alyssa with a grin.

"I've become more aware of any boundaries now, but I'm concerned that my jealous friend, Jasper, might be upset if he finds out we're chatting here. He's still unwell."

"Do you think I would be in the same space with you if it hadn't been for Lauren?" She folded her legs and crossed her arms in front of her chest.

"Landon Harper, you're a notorious charmer. Did your preference for women shift to our innocent Lauren because you're tired of the sexy ladies you dated?"

At the mention of Lauren's name, a shiver coursed through Landon. He responded with a shaky voice, Lyse, you know about Lauren and me?"

Alyssa replied with a smirk, "You and her? You're confusing me now."

"Lyse, look, I don't want to hide this from you any longer," Landon said.

He took a deep breath and, with a racing heart, solemnly admitted, 'I'm in love with Lauren. I want to be with her."

"And how many ladies have you fallen for this year?" She fired back with a disdainful smirk.

"She's the one I love the most."

“Every woman was ‘the one you loved the most’.”

“Lyse, I’m serious about Lauren!” he stated worriedly.

“I admit I was a player and dated many women, but those were just transactional relationships. Once we met each other’s needs, we went our separate ways.

“I’ve never felt like this before. Lauren is different. She captivates my entire soul.”

Alyssa teased, “You’re indeed Landon Harper. You seem enticed by the challenge of going after your friend’s sister.

“But mark my words-once you’re done with Lauren, you’ll cast her aside. As the novelty wears off, you’ll realize she may not fulfill the role of an ideal partner due to her disabilities, and you’ll discard her like a passion.

“Lyse, I understand that you see Lauren as your sister, but please, trust me. I’m willing to stake my reputation-no, my life-on it!

“I am wholeheartedly in love with Lauren. I want to be with her and build a future together!”

“Alright, I have a question for you.”

Alyssa turned serious and asked, "Imagine your grandpa, your mom, and your sister strongly disapprove of Lauren. They threaten to kick you out of Harper Group, withholding your inheritance. Your mom says she'll cut ties with you, and your family life is in turmoil due to your relationship.

"You're avoiding my question," she said with a touch of disappointment. "The only way to protect Lauren is by marrying her. Anything less would put her in harm's way."

The notion of marriage hit Landon like a lightning bolt, leaving him tensed and in shock.

Seeing his reaction, Alyssa assumed he had faltered. She let out a laugh and taunted, "In the past, you used to swear that you would marry me. Why are you silent now when I asked if you “Or perhaps, you think of Lauren as the least important Beckett daughter. Do you only deem her good

This was the first time in his life that he had felt genuine anger toward her. It suddenly became clear to him why Jasper would frequently cough up blood-it must have been because of Alyssa.

“Enough. There’s no point in arguing. I’m all for true love, but I refuse to Lauren suffer by your side,” she concluded. Her eyes welled up with tears at the thought of Lauren, who had endured abuse at home.

She pleaded. “Life has been harsh for Lauren. I don’t want to see her endure more suffering. Landon, you come from a complicated world, which would be a burden for Lauren. Please think this over.”

After taking Jasper to the hospital, Landon returned home, utterly drained.

He considered the villa he shared with Lauren his home. He might have a mom and a sister, but his mom had been depressed ever since his dad’s passing and had stayed abroad for her treatment. Not only that, but Zoe had also been studying abroad.

The Harper Residence had always been lonely and never merry.

During his brief time with Lauren, he had felt at ease, relaxed, and truly at home. He even harbored a

After some hesitation, Angelina questioned, "Mr. Harper, how will you deal with Ms. Zoe?"

"Angelina, do you ever think I'm a failure?" Landon pondered with his back turned to her.

"Mr. Harper, take it one step at a time. As long as you don't give up on Ms. Lauren, Ms. Zoe will eventually accept your decision."

Landon gathered his thoughts and opened the door to Lauren's room. He called out, "Lauren? I'm back."

Only a lamp was switched on by the headboard in the quiet room. Lauren curled up at the edge of the bed, burying her head between her knees.

He removed his black fur coat and laid it on the couch to avoid letting in drafts. Then, he tiptoed over and joined her by the bed.

“Lauren, does it still hurt?” He gently tousled her soft hair. She shook her head.

Lauren suddenly grabbed his arm and held it tightly as her breathing quickened.

"Lauren?" He was taken aback.

"Please don't go, Landon! Don't leave!" she pleaded, looking up with trembling lips and tear-streaked cheeks.

She admitted, "I lied to you. I was wrong. I want you to stay. Landon, I want you by my side!"

Feeling touched, he wiped away her tears and assured her, "I'm not leaving. I never intended to. I was

teasing you."

Lauren knelt on the bed and stared at him through tears like a pitiful kitten. She said, "Landon, hold me.

Tears brimmed in his eyes. He pulled her into his embrace, his heart bursting with affection. "Here's a hug.

"Tighter."

"Mhmm." He rested his chin against her neck, and his lips brushed against her reddened earlobes.

"Even tighter."

Landon joined her in bed, and they lay there together like a newlywed couple.

She rested her head against his arm and buried her head in his chest, where she sniffled a little before closing her eyes.

‘Lauren, can I ask you a question?’ Landon held her shoulders and gently caressed her arms.

“Um, sure.”

“Do you have feelings for me?” Landon asked, his heart pounding.

“Of course,” Lauren answered.

“It’s different from just liking me as a person,” Landon said, clearing his throat. He explained in embarrassment. “It’s... the kind of feelings that Jasper has for Alyssa.”

Her clear, bright eyes wavered. She toyed with the intricate button on his dark shirt and stammered, “I-I don’t know.”

He silently sighed and smiled wryly at her. “Alright. Go sleep now.”

“But I like to be with you. I can’t do anything right when you’re not at home because I’m worried. I’ll wait for you to come home. Time flies when I’m with you. Looking at you makes me happy,” she mumbled, her eyes half-closed.

His breath grew heavy, and his palms started sweating as he held her.

She confessed, "One day, you came home late. I pretended to be asleep when you checked on me in the bedroom, but I had been awake all along."

She pressed her lips together and said, "I smelled a strong stench of blood on you. You had a wound on your hand-I felt it when you touched my forehead."

Then, she picked up his hand and removed the black leather glove from his right hand. The wounds on his knuckles and fingertips might have healed, but the scars remained.

"Landon, I'm worried you'll get into danger out there. I'm so worried..." She felt a burst of pain in her heart.

Her lashes fluttered when she kissed his wounds.

"I don't know if that counts as having feelings for you."

His heart trembling, Landon finally lost control of his desire and pinned her underneath him.

Lauren moaned gently but wasn't too shocked. She had never been intimate with any man in her 22 years.

“Lauren, please don’t tempt me. I’m scared I might lose control of myself,” he warned her, his breathing intensifying at the sight of her rosy face. It was evident that he desired her.

“Do you want a kiss?”

She obediently wrapped her arms around his neck and pouted her lips. “I-I’m ready for it!”

His eyes burned with desire. “No. I might go further than that. It’ll make you a woman.”

He hugged her tight and mumbled, ‘Lauren, I’ll wait for the day you’re comfortable with me.’
