

Chapter 1725 Can I Live Here Too

Brandon's face showed a mix of regret and resignation, amusing Janet. She quickly turned away to hide her smile. 3

Still, Brandon caught the hint of a smile in her eyes.

Noticing Janet's good spirits, Brandon felt a glimmer of hope.

"My parents want me to stay here a bit longer. I've only been back for a day. I'm not keen on going back with you," Janet declared, her tone dripping with arrogance.

She was determined to stand her ground.

The thought of living separately clouded Brandon's mind.

His eyes lost their spark as he frowned, choosing not to persuade her further. Instead, he suggested, "If you prefer staying at your place, that's fine. But, could you check with your parents if I can stay here too?"

Janet, somewhat taken aback, wondered if she had misunderstood.

She withdrew her arm from Brandon's grip, looked at him quizzically, and queried, "What did you just say? What do you mean by that?"

Brandon slightly smiled, raising his eyebrows, and explained cheerfully, "I'm just thinking of staying at my in-laws' place for a few days. That wouldn't be an issue, would it?"

Brandon then patted Janet's shoulder, as though the matter was resolved. "Make sure to check with my mother-in-law, alright? I need to head off to work now."

As Brandon turned to leave, he suddenly seemed to recall something, pulling out a phone from his pocket and handing it to Janet. "This is yours."

Janet took the phone and stood there, watching as Brandon walked away.

Only after Brandon's tall figure vanished through the gate did she let out a scoffing snort.

It was clear that her impulsive idea to run away from home hadn't panned out.

As Janet was brooding, her phone chimed with an incoming message.

Janet unlocked her phone and glanced at the screen. The message was from Mandy.

"Janet, I got discharged from the hospital today! I'm throwing a party at my place tonight. Make sure you come!"

Learning of Mandy's discharge from the hospital lightened Janet's mood considerably. She quickly tapped out a response on her phone.

"Okay, I'll be there on time."

Despite not knowing how fancy the party would be, Janet decided to dress up for the occasion, honoring Mandy's heartfelt invitation.

Moreover, Mandy's social circle was brimming with designers. Janet greatly admired their aesthetic sense and valued their design insights.

Janet visited a high-end boutique and selected a golden strapless maxi dress. With the shop assistant's help, she applied light makeup and embraced a new look.

In front of the mirror, Janet admired herself in the golden dress. The dress's long hem trailed on the floor, accentuating her figure. Her hair was intricately braided, and interwoven with golden threads, creating a stunning effect.

Janet nodded in approval at her reflection.

Once ready, the White family's driver took her to the Hamilton family's residence.

As the car pulled up, Janet, still inside, spotted Brandon nearby, standing by the door as if waiting for someone.

Though curious, Janet didn't rush out of the car. She preferred to stay inside, observing Brandon, eager to see who he was waiting for.