

Chapter 1769 Good Girl

When Janet heard Laney's proposal, her eyes sparkled with enthusiasm.

Glancing at the tiny figure cradled in Laney's arms, she couldn't help but furrow her brow, voicing her concern with a hint of hesitation. "Are you certain?"

"Absolutely!" Laney responded with unwavering confidence, transferring the bundle that was Anya into Janet's arms before announcing her intent to slip into something dry. The rush had left her no time to change out of her damp attire earlier.

Janet, cradling Anya gently, expressed her apprehension about the little one.

"Isn't she too delicate for a shopping spree?" Janet asked worriedly.

Laney, on the brink of retreating to her room, paused to ease Janet's worries. With a reassuring smile, she scrolled through her phone.

"We can take her out. Look!" Laney handed the phone to Janet.

The phone was full of pictures of Garrett and Anya out; they looked very happy.

With a serious look, Laney said to Janet, "She's two months old now. It's perfectly fine to bring her out.

Garrett and I are even considering early education classes for her."

Janet's eyes widened in surprise at the mention of school for such a young child.

She lowered her head and looked at Anya, who was sucking her thumb. "School? At her age?"

"Ha-ha!" Laney chuckled at Janet's question. "It's not exactly school. Think of it more as a program to nurture her budding intellect."

Convinced, Janet nodded. "Alright, go change. I've got Anya."

"Okay." With that, Laney dashed upstairs.

Upon her return, she was a whirlwind of efficiency, gathering essentials for their outing—milk bottles, spare clothes, diapers, wipes, toys, and the baby stroller.

Just as they were set to leave, Janet remembered Brandon was still engrossed in a discussion with Garrett. She breezed into the room to inform him of their plans.

"Brandon, Laney and I are off to the shops!" Janet seemed to be in a good mood.

Brandon, caught up in business talk with Garrett, could only watch as Janet left, a frown shadowing his face.

Laney took the wheel, while Anya was secured in her car seat, observing the world with quiet curiosity. Janet, ever the concerned companion, frequently glanced back, ensuring Anya's contentment.

"She is so behaved!" Janet picked up a toy and began to play with Anya.

Upon reaching the mall, Anya, now nestled in her stroller with Janet pushing her, continued to be the picture of serenity, her eyes wide with wonder at the new sights around her.

Their first stop was a store filled with mother and baby essentials, where they indulged in picking out various items for Anya.

Next, they ventured into a children's boutique, delighting in the selection of adorable garments, choosing several charming outfits and dresses for her.