

Chapter 1836 Jeremy Showed Up

Janet took a big gulp of the second potion, leaving the bottle almost half empty.

She was just about to swallow the potion when the bitterness kicked in. The bitter taste was so strong that it almost made her throw up.

Her face contorted as she forced herself to swallow the potion.

The bitterness hit so hard that she retched twice and almost cried.

Worried, Brandon wrapped his around her. "Is it too bitter?"

It took Janet a few seconds to open her mouth and mutter, "Yes."

Brandon quickly put candy in Janet's mouth to ease the bitterness, but it didn't help much.

The sweetness of the candy barely made the bitterness go away. Looking at the remaining half of the potion in the bottle, Janet fretted.

Feeling sorry to see Janet's agony, Brandon bent over and kissed her to offer some sort of comfort. But the bitter taste on her lips made him stiff. It was indeed terribly bitter.

Noticing his reaction, Janet quickly pushed him away. "Don't. It won't help to see you also frowning or feeling sick because of the bitterness."

Brandon's furrowed brows eased as he broke into an amused smile. Not listening to her advice, he claimed her lips again and lingered there until the bitterness slowly faded.

The kiss almost left Janet's lips swollen, but it effectively brushed the bitterness in her mouth away.

But when she saw the bottle again, her frown reappeared.

Brandon smiled impishly. "It's okay. I'll help you ease the bitterness away. Or better yet, I drink it first and feed you with it through my mouth."

Finding his suggestion ridiculous, Janet poured the remaining potion in the bottle into her mouth.

The bitterness was as strong as earlier, but she endured it.

After swallowing everything, she retched again. Brandon bent over to kiss her again, but she hastily pushed him away and stuffed a few candies in her mouth.

Brandon felt sorry but also warm inside, knowing Janet meant well. It made him realize they could get through everything as long as they had each other's backs.

The ordeal drained Janet's energy so much that she collapsed to the bed when it was finished. Brandon let her rest for a moment before helping her gargle and take some more candies. It took a while and a few more wraps of candies before the bitterness in her mouth faded completely.

Maybe it was the medication or its unpleasant taste that caused Janet to swiftly drift into slumber as soon as she reclined on the bed.

Seeing Janet sound asleep, Brandon sighed in relief, and his expression became serious.

His phone had been flooded with text messages since earlier, but he muted it so he could focus on supporting Janet.

Now that she was fine, he opened and read the messages one by one.

The bodyguards had sent him reports about their sightings of Jeremy with pictures. After a quick scan, a cold sneer crept across Brandon's face. He responded to the text messages with an instruction to double the security and alert him if Jeremy showed up again.

Thinking of the possibility of Jeremy sneaking into the hospital, Brandon also sent Frank a message to tell hospital security to tighten their surveillance.

After reading the message, Frank escorted Alexandra away from the ward and into the lounge. He found Vinson and Wren inside and couldn't help but feel something strange about the two.

Being in the same room with the three, Frank couldn't help but cast them a wary look. He didn't know why, but it seemed the three were up to something.

Frank was already suspicious of the three when Brandon asked him to test the potion. His vigilance had heightened. Anyone who dared to disrupt his territory with their evil plans wouldn't escape unscathed.

Before Frank could act on his thoughts, Jeremy appeared in the hospital.
