

Chapter 1874 Begging For Forgiveness

At the sight of Locke's unwelcoming expression, which indicated that he was not willing to let them in, Della nearly lost her temper.

However, having just lost the Nelson family as a business partner, she dared not offend her son. With a frustrated look, she took a step back and pointed at Rosetta, saying, "She has something to tell you."

Taking a look at Rosetta's face, Locke felt nothing but disgust towards her. How could someone so seemingly harmless be so vicious? It was a shame that she hadn't been sent to jail.

Despite being intimidated by Locke's stern look, Rosetta mustered some courage and stuttered, "I'm sorry, Locke. I was wrong, but I only did it because I love you so much. I truly recognize my mistakes now. I simply couldn't bear the thought of you being with another woman. I promise I won't repeat it. If you can forgive me, I'll take care of Mandy. I'll do whatever it takes. I promise I won't harm her again. Please, just give me another chance. Could you take into consideration all the years that I have loved you?"

"Forgive you? How could I possibly forgive you?" Locke retorted sarcastically.

Rosetta's spine went numb under Locke's icy stare, but she had no choice but to press on and continue to beg. "Locke, if you just have someone delete those accusations online, I promise I won't provoke Mandy anymore. I swear. Please, Locke. We grew up together. Can you really stand by and watch me get cursed out by thousands of people like this?"

Rosetta was well aware that as a socialite and a marital asset meticulously groomed by the Nelson family, she couldn't afford to tarnish her elegant and dignified image. If her noble and elegant facade were destroyed, it would ruin everything for her.

Locke sneered, "If I forgive you, what about Mandy and my unborn child?"

Rosetta trembled under the cold intensity of Locke's demeanor. Her eyes turned red with tears as she reached out and desperately clutched his sleeve, pleading, "I truly know that what I did was wrong. Once you delete those posts, I'll apologize to her immediately. I'll even go to the church every day to pray for that bastard...I mean, for your child. I'll ask the priest to bless him with a more fortunate reincarnation. I'm willing to do anything, just as long as you forgive me."

Her apology did nothing to quell Locke's anger. Instead, he clenched his fists so tightly that his knuckles could be heard cracking. It took him all of his strength to restrain himself from letting them fly at her face.

How could a person be so utterly shameless?

He sneered and replied, "Interesting choice of words.

Are you suggesting that bad luck was the only reason Mandy and my child suffered? Are you blaming my child for not having a good incarnation? If that's the case and it's not your fault, why are you here?"

Seeing Locke's eyes burning red with anger, Della, who had remained silent for a while, stepped in to try and mediate. "Locke, Rosetta didn't mean it that way. She's here to sincerely apologize to Mandy, and she genuinely wants to help the child find peace. Continuing this conflict will only cause Mandy further distress. Let's just let bygones be bygones, alright?"

"Mom, there's something I've always been curious about. Are you certain that the Nelson family will always be prosperous?" Locke inquired after casting a cold glance at Della, who stood next to Rosetta. "What makes you so sure that pleasing Rosetta will secure your wealth and status for the rest of your life? Did the Nelson family give you everything you have? Am I not the one responsible for it? Why can't you see that?"

Locke was bitter. It became clear to him that in his mother's eyes, the life of his unborn child was less important than her perceived security of wealth and status. Unfortunately, she had picked the wrong side.

If he wanted to, he could completely ruin the Nelson family and leave them with no chance of recovery.
